

A Bold Stroke for a Husband,

A COMEDY,

AS PERFORMED

At the Theatres : Royal.

---

---

BY MRS. COWLEY.

---

---

A NEW EDITION.

---

London:

PRINTED BY AND FOR BARKER AND SON,

DRAMATIC REPOSITORY,

GREAT RUSSELL STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

[Price 2s.]

P R O L O G U E.

WRITTEN BY TWO GENTLEMEN.

NOW, by my sanguine hopes, our author cries,
 With expectation sparkling in her eyes,
 There's nothing here should scare me that I see,
 They all are saplings of the tough old tree :
 Women, who wear Elysium in their look,
 And men, unconquer'd as their native oak.
 But yet a word or two I'll briefly say,
 To prove we're right in naming of our play.
 Of human conduct, in each varied scene,
 Th' extreme succeeds beyond the patient mean ;
 If eminence in rank our bosoms fire,
 If merit to preferment dare aspire,
 Follow the active, not the formal part,
 " And snatch a grace beyond the rules of art."

Bold Strokes, from bounding genius firmly struck, Attract success, more than the turns of luck.
 The bankrupt swindler, though to pay unable,
 Oft mends his fortune by the E O table ;
 Or, failing there, he acts a braver part,
 And takes a purse,—a Bold Stroke for the cart.
 The gamester too forgets each tender tie,
 And ventures his last guinea on a die,
 'Till ruin'd, and repenting of the evil,
 He hangs himself—a Bold Stroke for the Devil.
 The fortune hunter sports a suit of lace,
 In this a Count, a Lord in t'other place,
 Success at length, begins his married life
 At Gretna Green—a Bold Stroke for a Wife.

But are bold strokes to vicious men confin'd ?
 Does virtue lie inactive in the mind ?
 It cannot be, while England's genius breathes,
 And many a brow is deck'd with laurel wreaths.
 Bold strokes in war are England's greatest pride ;
 Think how a HOOD has liv'd, a MANNERS died

Our play holds forth the conquest of a heart,
 By one bold stroke of nature, not of art.
 A female pen calls female virtue forth,
 And fairly shews to man her sex's worth.
 Could men but see what female sense can do,
 How apt their wit, their constancy—how true ;

P R O L O G U E.

iii

In vain would rakes the married state revile,
Nor with the wanton, precious time beguile.

Such is our aim, to rectify the age,
By bringing rising follies on the stage ;
Be then propitious, let our fears decrease,
While you, with plaudits, ratify the peace!

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

DON JULIO,	MR. LEWIS.
DON CARLOS,	MR. WROUGHTON.
DON CÆSAR,	MR. QUICK.
DON VINCENTIO,	MR. EDWIN.
DON GARCIA,	MR. WHITFIELD,
VASQUEZ,	MR. FEARON.
GASPER,	MR. WILSON.
PEDRO,	MR. STEVENS.

OLIVIA,	MRS. MATTOCKS.
VICTORIA,	MRS. ROBINSON.
LAURA,	MRS. WHITFIELD.
MARCELLA,	MISS MORRIS.
MINETTE,	MRS. WILSON.
INIS,	MISS PLATT.
SANCHA,	MRS. DAVENETT.

SCENE, SPAIN.

---

---

A Bold Stroke for a Husband.

---

A C T I. S C E N E I.

A Street in Madrid.

Enter SANCHA from a House, she advances, then runs back, and beckons to PEDRO within.

SANCHA.

HIST! Pedro! Pedro!

Enter PEDRO.

There he is : do'st see him? just turning by St. Antony in the corner. Now, do you tell him that your mistress is not at home ; and if his jealous Donship should insist on searching the house, as he did yesterday, say that somebody is ill—the black has got a fever, or that—

PED. Pho, pho, get you in. Don't I know that the duty of a lacquey in Madrid is to lie with a good grace? I have been studying it now for a whole week, and I'll defy Don or Devil to surprize me into a truth. Get you in, I say—here he comes. [Exit. SANCHA.

Enter CARLOS.

[PEDRO struts up to him] Donna Laura is not at home, Sir.

B

CAR.

CAR. Not at home!—come, Sir, what have you received for telling that lie?

PED. Lie!—Lie!—Signor!—

CAR. It must be a lie by your promptness in delivering it.—What a fool does your mistress trust!—A clever rascal would have waited my approach, and, delivering the message with easy coolness, deceived me—thou hast been on the watch, and runnest towards me with a face of stupid importance, bawling, that she may hear through the lettice how well thou obeyest her,—“Donna Laura is not at home, Sir.”

PED. Hear through the lettice—hah! by'r lady she must have long ears, to reach from the grotto in the garden to the street.

CAR. Hah! [seizes him] Now, Sir, your ears shall be longer, if you do not tell me who is with her in the grotto.

PED. In the grotto, Sir!—did I say any thing about the grotto? I—I only meant that—

CAR. Fool!—dost thou trifle with me? who is with her?
[Pinching his ear.]

PED. Oh!—why nobody, Sir—only the pretty young gentleman's valet, waiting for an answer to a letter he brought. There! I have saved my ears at the expence of my place. I have worn this fine coat but a week, and I shall be sent back to Segovia for not being able to lie, though I have been learning the art six days and nights.

CAR. Well—come this way—if thou wilt promise to be faithful to me, I will not betray thee: nor at present enter the house.

PED. Oh, Sir, blessings on you!

CAR. How often does the pretty young gentleman visit her?

PED.

PED. Every day, Sir—If he misses, madam's stark wild.

CAR. Where does he live?

PED. Truly, I know not, Sir.

CAR. How! [Menacing.]

PED. By the honesty of my mother, I cannot tell, Sir. She calls him Florio;—that's his Christian name—his Heathen name I never heard.

CAR. You must acquaint me when they are next together.

PED. Lord, Sir, if there should be any blood spilt!

CAR. Promise,—or I'll lead thee by the ears to the grotto.

PED. I promise, I promise.

CAR. There, take that, [gives money] and if thou art faithful I'll treble it. Now go in, and be a good lad—and, d'ye hear?—you may tell lies to every body else, but remember you must always speak truth to me.

PED. I will, Sir,—I will. [Exit, looking at the money.]

CAR. 'Tis well my passion is extinguished, for I can now act with coolness; I'll wait patiently for the hour of their security, and take them in the softest moments of their love. But if ever I trust to woman more—may every—

Enter two women, veiled, followed by JULIO.

JULIO. Fye, ladies! keep your curtains drawn so late! The sun is up—'tis time to look abroad—[tries to remove their veils] Nay, if you are determined on night and silence, I take my leave. A woman without prattle, is like Burgundy without spirit.—Bright eyes, to touch me, must belong to sweet tongues. [Going.]

CAR. Sure 'tis Julio. Hey!

B 2

JULIO.

JULIO. [Returning] Don Carlos? Yes, by all the sober gods of matrimony!—Why, what business, goodman gravity, can'st thou have in Madrid—I understand you are married—quietly settled in your own pastures—father of a family, and the instructive companion of country vine dressers—ha! ha!

CAR. 'Tis false, by heaven!—I have forsworn the country—left my family, and run away from my wife.

JULIO. Really! then matrimony has not totally destroyed thy free will.

CAR. 'Tis with difficulty I have preserv'd it though; for women, thou knowest, are most unreasonable beings! as soon as I had exhausted my stock of love tales, which, with management, lasted beyond the 'honey-moon, madam grew sullen,—I found home dull, and amused myself with the pretty peasants of the neighbourhood—Worse and worse!—we had nothing now but faintings, tears and hysterics for twenty-four honey-moons more.—So one morning I gave her in her sleep a farewell kiss, to comfort her when she should awake, and posted to Madrid; where, if it was not for the remembrance of the clog at my heel, I should bound o'er the regions of pleasure, with more spirit than a young Arabian on his mountains.

JULIO. Do you find this clog no hindrance in affairs of gallantry?

CAR. Not much.—In that house there—but, d—her, she's perfidious!—in that house is a woman of beauty, with pretensions to character and fortune, who devoted herself to my passion.

JULIO. If she's perfidious, give her to the winds.

CAR. Ah, but there is a rub, Julio, I have been a fool—a woman's fool!—In a state of intoxication, she wheedled me, or rather cheated me, out of a settlement.

JULIO.

JULIO. Pho! is that——

CAR. Oh! but you know not its nature. A settlement of lands that both honour and gratitude ought to have preserved sacred from such base alienation.—In short, if I cannot recover them, I am a ruined man.

JULIO. Nay, this seems a worse clog than t'other—Poor Carlos! so bewiv'd and be——

CAR. Prithee have compassion.

Enter a Servant with a letter to Julio, he reads it, and then nods to the Servant, who exits.

CAR. An appointment, I'll be sworn, by that air of mystery and satisfaction—come, be friendly, and communicate.

JULIO. [Putting up the letter] You are married, Carlos;—that's all I have to say—you are married.

CAR. Pho, that's past long ago, and ought to be forgotten; but if a man does a foolish thing once, he'll hear of it all his life.

JULIO. Aye, the time has been when thou might'st have been entrusted with such a dear secret,—when I might have opened the billet, and feasted thee with the sweet meandering strokes at the bottom, which form her name, when——

CAR. What, 'tis from a woman then?

JULIO. It is.

CAR. Handsome?

JULIO. Hum—not absolutely handsome, but she'll pass, with one who has not had his taste spoilt by—maturity.

CAR. Malicious dog!—Is she young?

JULIO. Under twenty—fair complexion, azure eyes, red lips, teeth of pearl, polished neck, fine turn'd shape, graceful——

CAR. Hold, Julio, if thou lov'st me !—Is it possible she can be so bewitching a creature ?

JULIO. 'Tis possible—though, to deal plainly, I never saw her ; but I love my own pleasure so well, that I could fancy all that, and ten times more.

CAR. What star does she inhabit ?

JULIO. Irradiate thou should'st have said, after such a description—but, faith, I know not ; my orders are to be in waiting at seven, at the Prado.

CAR. Prado!—hey!—gad! can't you take me with you? for though I have forsworn the sex myself, and have done with them for ever, yet I may be of use to you, you know.

JULIO. Faith, I can't see that—however, as you are a poor woe-begone married mortal, I'll have compassion, and suffer thee to come.

CAR. Then I am a man again ! Wife, avaunt !—mistress, farewell !—At seven you say ?

JULIO. Exactly.

CAR. I'll meet thee at Philippi ! [Exit. severally.]

S C E N E II.

A spacious Garden belonging to Don CÆSAR.

Enter MINETTE and INIS.

MIN. There, will that do? My lady sent me to make her up a nosegay ; these orange flowers are delicious, and this rose, how sweet !

INIS. Pho, what signifies wearing sweets in her bosom, unless they would sweeten her manners ?—'tis amazing you can be so much at your ease ; one might think your lady's tongue was a lute, and her morning scolds an agreeable serenade.

MIN.

MIN. So they are—Custom you know. I have been used to her music now these two years, and I don't believe I could relish my breakfast without it.

INIS. I would rather never break my fast, than do it on such terms. What a difference between your mistress and mine ; Donna Victoria is as much too gentle, as her cousin is too harsh.

MIN. Aye, and you see what she gets by it ; had she been more spirited, perhaps her husband would not have forsaken her ;—men enlisted under the matrimonial banner, like those under the King's, would be often tempted to run away from their colours, if fear did not keep them in dread of desertion.

INIS. If making a husband afraid is the way to keep him faithful, I believe your lady will be the happiest wife in Spain.

MIN. Ha, ha, ha ! how people may be deceived !—nay, how people are deceived !—but time will discover all things.

INIS. What ! what is there a secret in the business, Minette ? if there is, hang time ! let's have it directly.

MIN. Now, if I dar'd but tell ye—lud ! lud ! how I could surprize ye !—

[Going.

INIS. [Stopping her] Don't go.

MIN. I must go ; I am on the very brink of betraying my mistress,—I must leave you—mercy upon me !—it rises like new bread.

INIS. I hope it will choak ye, if you stir 'till I know all.

MIN. Will you never breathe a syllable ?

INIS. Never.

MIN. Will you strive to forget it the moment you have heard it?

INIS. I'll swear to myself forty times a-day to forget it.

MIN. You are sure you will not let me stir from this spot till you know the whole.

INIS. Not as far as a thrush hops.

MIN. So! now, then, in one word,—here it goes. Though every body supposes my lady an errant scold, she's no more a——

Don CÆSAR without.

Out upon't! e——h——h!

MIN. Oh, St. Jerome!—here is her father, and his privy counsellor, Gasper. I can never communicate a secret in quiet. Well! come to my chamber, for, now my hand's in, you shall have the whole.—I wou'd not keep it another day, to be confidant to an infant.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Don CÆSAR and GASPER.

GASP. Take comfort, Sir; take comfort.

CÆS. Take it!—why where the devil shall I find it? You may say, take physic Sir, or, take poison, Sir——they are to be had; but what signifies bidding me take comfort, when I can neither buy it, beg it, nor steal it?

GASP. But patience will bring it, Sir.

CÆS. 'Tis false, firrah.—Patience is a cheat, and the man that rank'd her with the cardinal virtues was a fool.—I have had patience at bed and board these three long years, but the comfort she promis'd, has never called in with a civil how d'ye.

GASP.

GASP. Ay, Sir, but you know the poets say that the twin sister and companion of comfort is good humour.—Now if you would but drop that agreeable acidity, which is so conspicuous——

CÆS. Then let my daughter drop her perverse humour ; 'tis a more certain bar to marriage than ugliness or folly ; and will send me to my grave, at last, without male heirs. [crying.] How many have laid siege to her ! But that humour of her's, like the works of Gibraltar, no Spaniard can find pregnable.

GASP. Ay, well—Troy held out but ten years——Let her once tell over her beads, unmarried, at five-and-twenty, and, my life upon it, she ends the rosary, with a hearty prayer for a good husband.

CÆS. What, d'ye expect me to wait till the horrors of old maidenism frighten her into civility ? No, no ;—I'll shut her up in a convent, marry myself, and have heirs in spite of her. There's my neighbour Don Vasquez's daughter, she is but nineteen—— GASP. The very step I was going to recommend, Sir. You are but a young gentleman of sixty-three, I take it ; and a husband of sixty-three, who marries a wife of nineteen, will never want heirs, take my word for it.

CÆS. What ! do you joke, firrah ?

GASP. Oh no, Sir—not if you are serious. I think it would be one of the pleasantest things in the world—Madam would throw a new life into the family ; and when you are above stairs in the gout, Sir, the music of her concerts, and the spirit of her converzationes would reach your sick bed, and be a thousand times more comforting than flannels and panada.

CÆS.

CÆS. Come, come, I understand ye.—But this daughter of mine—I shall give her but two chances more.—Don Garcia and Don Vincentio will both be here to-day, and if she plays over the old game, I'll marry to-morrow morning, if I hang myself the next.

GASP. You decide right, Signor ; at sixty-three the marriage noose and the hempen noose should always go together.

CÆS. Why, you dog you, do you suppose—There's Don Garcia—there he is, coming through the portico. Run to my daughter, and bid her remember what I have said to her. [Exit GASP.]

She has had her lesson—but another memento mayn't be amiss—a young slut!—pretty, and witty, and rich—a match for a prince, and yet—but hift!—Not a word to my young man, if I can but keep him in ignorance 'till he is married, he must make the best of his bargain afterwards, as other honest men have done before him.

Enter GARCIA.

Welcome, Don Garcia!—why you are rather before your time.

GARC. Gallantry forbid that I should not, when a fair lady is concern'd. Should Donna Olivia welcome me as frankly as you do, I shall think I have been tardy.

CÆS. When you made your overtures, Signor, I understood it was from inclination to be allied to my family, not from a particular passion to my daughter. Have you ever seen her?

GARC. But once—that transiently—yet sufficient to convince me that she is charming.

CÆS.

CÆS. Why yes, tho' I say it, there are few prettier women in Madrid; and she has got enemies amongst her own sex accordingly. They pretend to say that—I say, Sir, they have reported that she is not blest'd with that kind of docility and gentleness that a—— now, tho' she may not be so very placid, and insipid, as some young women, yet, upon the whole—

GARC. Oh fye, Sir!—not a word—A beauty cannot be ill-temper'd; gratified vanity keeps her in good humour with herself, and every body about her.

CÆS. Yes, as you say—vanity is a prodigious sweetener; and Olivia, considering how much she has been humoured, is as gentle and pliant as——

Enter MINETTE.

MIN. Oh, Sir! shield me from my mistress—She is in one of her old tempers—the whole house is in an uproar.—I cannot support it!

CÆS. Hush!

MIN. No, Sir, I can't hush—A faint could not bear it. I am tired of her tyranny, and must quit her service.

CÆS. Then quit it in a moment—go to my steward, and receive your wages—go—begone! 'Tis a cousin of my daughter's she is speaking of.

MIN. A cousin, Sir!—No, 'tis Donna Olivia, your daughter—my mistress. Oh, Sir! you seem to be a sweet tender-hearted young gentleman—'twould move you to pity if——

[to Garcia.]

CÆS. I'll move you, hussy, to some purpose, if you don't move off.

GARC. I am really confounded——can the charming Olivia——

CÆS.

CÆS. Spite, Sir—meer malice ! My daughter has refused her some cast gown, or some—

OLIVIA without.

Where is she !—Where is Minette ?

CÆS. Oh 'tis all over !—the tempest is coming.

Enter OLIVIA.

OLIV. Oh, you vile creature !—to speak to me !—to answer me !—am I made to be answer'd ?

CÆS. Daughter ! Daughter ! [During the following conversation he shews the most anxious impatience.]

OLIV. Because I threw my work-bag at her, she had the insolence to complain ; and, on my repeating it, said she would not bear it.—Servants chuse what they shall bear !

MIN. When you are married, Ma'am, I hope your husband will bear your humour, less patiently than I have done.

OLIV. My husband !—dost think my husband shall contradict my will ? Oh, I long to set a pattern to those milky wives, whose mean compliances degrade the sex.

GARC. Opportune ! [Aside.]

OLIV. The only husband on record who knew how to treat a wife was Socrates ; and tho' his lady was a Grecian, I have some reason to believe her descendants match'd into our family ; and never shall my tame submission disgrace my ancestry.

GARC. Heav'ns ! why have you never curb'd this intemperate spirit, Don Cæsar ?

OLIV. [Starting.] Curb'd, Sir ! talk thus to your groom—curbs and bridles for a woman's tongue !

GARC.

GARC. Not for your's, lady, truly ! 'tis too late. But had the torrent, now so overbearing, been taken at its spring, it might have been stem'd, and turn'd in gentle streamlets at the master's pleasure.

OLIV. A mistake, friend !—my spirit, at its spring, was too powerful for any master.

GARC. Indeed !—perhaps you may meet a Petruchio, gentle Catherine, yet.

OLIV. But no gentle Catherine will he find me, believe it.—Catherine ! why she had not the spirit of a roasted chesnut—a few big words, an empty oath, and a scanty dinner, made her as submissive as a spaniel. My fire will not be so soon extinguished—it shall resist big words, oaths, and starving.

MIN. I believe so indeed ; help the poor gentleman, I say, to whose fate you fall.

GARC. Don Cæsar, adieu ! My commiseration for your fate subdues the resentment I should otherwise feel at your endeavouring to deceive me into such a marriage.

OLIV. Marriage ! oh mercy !—Is this Don Garcia ?

[Apart to Cæsar.]

CÆS. Yes, termagant !

OLIV. O, what a misfortune ! Why did you not tell me it was the gentleman you design'd to marry me to ? Oh, Sir ! all that is past was in sport ; a contrivance between my maid and me : I have no spirit at all—I am as patient as poverty.

GARC. This mask fits too ill on your features, fair lady : I have seen you without disguise, and rejoice in your ignorance of my name, since, but for that, that, my peaceful home might have become the seat of perpetual discord.

MIN. Aye, Sir, you would never have known what a quiet hour——

OLIV. [Strikes her.] Impertinence ! Indeed, Sir, I can be as gentle and forbearing as a pet lamb.

GARC. I cannot doubt it, Madam ; the proofs of your placidity are very striking—But, adieu ! though I shall pray for your conversion, rather than have the honour of it—I'd turn Dominican, and condemn myself to perpetual celibacy. [Exit.]

CÆS. Now, huffley !—now, huffley !—what do you expect ?

OLIV. Dear me ! how can you be so unreasonable ! did ever daughter do more to oblige a father ! I absolutely begg'd the man to have me.

CÆS. Yes, vixen ! after you had made him detest ye ; what, I suppose, he did not hit your fancy, madam ; tho' there is not in all Spain a man of prettier conversation.

OLIV. Yes, he has a very pretty kind of conversation ; 'tis like a parenthesis.

CÆS. Like a parenthesis !

OLIV. Yes, it might be all left out, and never miss'd. However, I thought him a modest kind of a well-meaning young man, and that he would make a pretty sort of a husband—for notwithstanding his blustering, had I been his wife, in three months he should have been as humble and complaisant as——

CÆS. Ay, there it is—there it is !—that spirit of yours, huffley, you can neither conquer nor conceal ; but I'll find a way to tame it, I'll warrant me. [Exit.]

[Olivia]

[Olivia and Minette follow him with their eyes, and then burst into a laugh.]

MIN. Well, madam, I give you joy ! had other ladies as much success in getting lovers, as you have in getting rid of yours, what contented faces we should see.

OLIV. But to what purpose do I get rid of them, whilst they rise in succession like monthly pinks ? Was there ever any thing so provoking ?—After some quiet, and believing the men had ceased to trouble themselves about me, no less than two proposals have been made to my inexorable father this very day—What will become of me ?

MIN. What shou'd become of you ? You'll chuse one from the pair, I hope. Believe me, madam, the only way to get rid of the impertinence of lovers, is to take one, and make him a scare-crow to the rest.

OLIV. Oh, but I cannot !—Invention assist me this one day !

MIN. Upon my word, madam, invention owes you nothing ; and I am afraid you can draw on that bank no longer.—You must trust to your established character of vixen.

OLIV. But that won't frighten 'em all, you know, tho' it did its business with sober Don Garcia. The brave General Antonio would have made a property of me, in spite of every thing, had I not luckily discovered his antipathy to cats, and so scar'd the hero, by pretending an immoderate passion for young kittens.

MIN. Yes, but you was still harder push'd by the Castilian Count, and his engrav'd genealogy from Noah.

OLIV. Oh, he would have kept his post as immovably as the griffins at his gate, had I not very seriously imparted to him, that my mother's great uncle sold oranges in Aragon.

ragon. Ha ! ha ! ha ! And my little delicate spark, who washes in rose-water, and has his bed strewed with violets, would never have dismissed himself, hadst thou not scented my mareschal powder with assa foetida.

MIN. And pray, madam, if I may be so bold, who is the next gentleman ?

OLIV. Oh, Don Vincentio, who distracts every body with his skill in music. He ought to be married to a Viol de Gamba. I bless my stars I have never yet had a miser in my list—on such a character all art would be lost, and nothing but an earthquake, to swallow up my estate, could save me.

MIN. Well, if some one did but know, how happy would some one be, that for his sake——

OLIV. Now, don't be impertinent, Minette. You have several times attempted to slide yourself into a secret, which I am resolv'd to keep to myself. Continue faithful, and suppress your curiosity. [Exit.]

MIN. Suppress my curiosity, madam !—why, I am a chambermaid, and a sorry one too, it should seem, to have been in your confidence two years, and never have got the master-secret yet. I never was six weeks in a family before, but I knew every secret they had in it for three generations ; aye, and I'll know this too, or I'll blow up all her plans, and declare to the world that she is no more a vixen than other fine ladies—they have most of 'em a touch on't. [Exit.]

END OF THE FIRST ACT.

A C T II. S C E N E I.

An Apartment at Donna LAURA's.Enter LAURA followed by CARLOS.

CARLOS.

NAY, Madam, you may as well stop here, for I'll follow you through every apartment, but I will be heard. [seizing her hand.]

LAU. This insolence is not to be endured; within my own walls to be thus——

CAR. The time has been, when within your walls I might be master.

LAU. Yes, you were then master of my heart, that gave you a right which——

CAR. You have now transferred to another. [flinging away her hand.]

LAU. Well, Sir!

CAR. "Well, Sir!"—Unblushing acknowledgment! False, fickle woman!

LAU. Because I have luckily got the start of you; in a few weeks I should have been the accuser, and you the false and fickle.

CAR. And to secure yourself from that disgrace, you prudently looked out in time for another lover.

LAU. I can pardon your sneer, because you are mortified.

CAR. Mortified!

LAU. Yes, mortified to the soul. Carlos! I know your sex: the vainest female, in the hour of her exultation and power, is still out-done by man in vanity.—'Tis more your ruling passion, than 'tis ours ; and 'tis wounded vanity that makes you thus tremble with rage at being deserted.

C

more

CAR. [Stamping] Madam ! Madam !

LAU. This rage would have been all cool inference, had I waited for your change—the crime which now appears so black in me. Then, whilst, with all my sex's weakness, I had knelt at your feet, and reproached you only with my tears ; how composed would have been your feelings.—Scarcely would you have deigned to form a phrase of pity for me ; perhaps have bid me forget a man no longer worthy my attachment, and recommended me to hartshorn and my women.

CAR. Has any hour since I have first known you, given you cause for such unjust —

LAU. Yes, every hour—Now, Carlos, I bring thee to the test !—You saw, you lik'd, you lov'd me ; was there no formal trusting woman whom you deserted to indulge the transient passion ? Yes, one blest with beauty, gentleness and youth ; one, who more than her own being lov'd thee, who made thee rich, and whom thou mad'st thy wife.

CAR. My wife !—here's a turn ! So to revenge the quarrels of my wife—

LAU. No, do not mistake me—what I have done was merely to indulge myself, without more regard to your feelings, than you had to her's.

CAR. And you dare avow to my face, that you have a passion for another ?

LAU. I do, and—for I am above disguise—I confess, so tender is my love for Florio, it has scarcely left a trace of that I once avow'd for Carlos.

CAR.

CAR. Well, Madam, if I hear this without some sudden vengeance on the tongue which speaks it, thank the annihilation of that passion, whose remembrance is as dead in my bosom as in yours. Let us, however, part friends, and with a mutual acquittal of every obligation—so give up the settlement of that estate, which left me almost a beggar.

LAU. Give it up!—ha, ha!—no, Carlos, you consign'd me that estate as a proof of love; do not imagine then, I'll give up the only part of our connection, of which I am not ashamed.

CAR. Base woman! you know 'twas not a voluntary gift—after having in vain practis'd on my fondness, whilst in a state of intoxication, you prevailed on me to sign the deed, which you had artfully prepar'd for the purpose—therefore, you must restore it.

LAU. Never, never.

CAR. Ruin is in the word!—Call it back, Madam, or I'll be reveng'd on thee in thy heart's dearest object—thy minion Florio!—he shall not riot on my fortune.

LAU. Ha, ha, ha! Florio is safe—your lands are sold, and in another country we shall enjoy the blessing of thy fond passion, whilst that passion is indulging itself in hatred and execrations. [Exit.]

CAR. My vengeance shall first fall on her. [following]
No, he shall be the first victim, or 'twill be incomplete.—Reduc'd to poverty, I cannot live;—Oh, folly! where are now all the gilded prospects of my youth? Had I—but 'tis too late to look back,—remorse attends the past, and ruin!—ruin waits me in the future!

S C E N E II.

Don CÆSAR's.VICTORIA enters perusing a letter ; enter OLIVIA.

OLIV. [Speaks as entering] To be sure—if my father should enquire for me, tell him I am in Donna Victoria's apartment.—Smiling, I protest ! my dear gloomy cousin, where have you purchased that sun-shiny look ?

VICT. It is but April sunshine, I fear ; but who could resist such a temptation to smile ? a letter from Donna Laura, my husband's mistress, stiling me her dearest Florio ! her life ! her soul ! and complaining of a twelve hours absence, as the bitterest misfortune.

OLIV. Ha, ha, ha ! most doughty Don ! pray let us see you in your feather and doublet ; as a Cavaleiro, it seems, you are formidable. So suddenly to rob your husband of his charmer's heart ! you must have us'd some witchery.

VICT. Yes, powerful witchery—the knowledge of my sex. Oh ! did the men but know us, as well as we do ourselves ;—but thank fate they do not, 'twould be dangerous.

OLIV. What, I suppose, you prais'd her understanding, was captivated by her wit, and absolutely struck dumb by the amazing beauties of—her mind.

VICT. Oh, no,—that's the mode prescribed by the Essayists on the female heart—ha, ha, ha !—Not a woman breathing, from fifteen to fifty, but would rather have a compliment to the tip of her ear, or the turn of her ankle, than a volume in praise of her intellects.

OLIV. So flattery then, is your boasted pill ?

VICT.

VICT. No, that's only the occasional gilding; but 'tis in vain to attempt a description of what changed its nature with every moment. I was now attentive—now gay—then tender—then careless. I strove rather to convince her that I was charming, than that I myself was charm'd; and when I saw love's arrow quivering in her heart, instead of falling at her feet, sung a triumphant air, and remember'd a sudden engagement.

OLIV. [Archly] Would you have done so, had you been a man?

VICT. Assuredly—knowing what I now do as a woman.

OLIV. But can all this be worth while, merely to rival a fickle husband with one woman, whilst he is setting his feather, perhaps, at half a score others?

VICT. To rival him was not my first motive. The Portuguese robbed me of his heart; I concluded she had fascinations which nature had denied to me; it was impossible to visit her as a woman; I, therefore, assumed the Cavalier to study her, that I might, if possible, be to my Carlos, all he found in her.

OLIV. Pretty humble creature!

VICT. In this adventure I learnt more than I expected;—my (oh cruel!) my husband has given this woman an estate, almost all that his dissipations had left us.

OLIV. Indeed!

VICT. To make him more culpable, it was my estate, it was that fortune which my lavish love had made his, without securing it to my children.

OLIV. How could you be so improvident?

VICT. Alas! I trusted him with my heart, with my happiness, without restriction. Should I have shewn a greater solicitude for any thing, than for these? [weeps]

OLIV. The event proves that you should; but how can you be thus passive in your sorrow? since I had assumed the man, I'd make him feel a man's resentment for such injuries.

VICT. Oh, Olivia! what resentment can I shew to him I have vow'd to honour, and whom, both my duty and my heart compel me yet to love?

OLIV. Why, really now, I think—positively, there's no thinking about it; 'tis among the arcana of the married life, I suppose.

VICT. You, who know me, can judge how I suffered in prosecuting my plan. I have thrown off the delicacy of sex; I have worn the mask of love to the destroyer of my peace—but the object is too great to be abandoned—nothing less than to save my husband from ruin, and to restore him, again a lover, to my faithful bosom.

OLIV. Well, I confess, Victoria, I hardly know whether most to blame or praise you; but, with the rest of the world, I suppose, your success will determine me.

Enter GASPER.

GASP. Pray, Madam, are your wedding shoes ready? [to Olivia.]

OLIV. Insolence! . . . . I can scarcely ever keep up the vixen to this fellow. [apart to Victoria.]

GASP. You'll want them, Ma'am, to-morrow morning, that's all—so I came to prepare ye.

OLIV. I want wedding shoes to-morrow! if you are kept on water gruel 'till I marry, that plump face of yours will be chap-fall'n, I believe.

GASP.

GASP. Yes, truly, I believe so too. Lackaday, did you suppose I came to bring you news of your own wedding? no such glad tidings for you, lady, believe me.—You married! I am sure the man who ties himself to you, ought to be half a salamander, and able to live in fire.

OLIV. What marriage then is it, you do me the honour to inform me of?

GASP. Why, your father's marriage. You'll have a mother-in-law to-morrow, and having, like a dutiful daughter, danced at the wedding, be immur'd in a convent for life.

OLIV. Immur'd in a convent! then I'll raise sedition in the sisterhood, depose the abbess, and turn the confessor's chair to a go-cart.

GASP. So the threat of the mother-in-law, which I thought would be worse than that of the abbess, does not frighten ye?

OLIV. No, because my father dares not give me one.—Marry, without my consent! no, no, he'll never think of it, depend on't; however, lest the fit should grow strong upon him, I'll go and administer my volatiles to keep it under. [Exit.]

GASP. Administer 'em cautiously then—too strong a dose of your volatiles would make the fit stubborn. Who'd think that pretty arch look belong'd to a termagant? what a pity! 'twould be worth a thousand ducats to cure her.

VICT. Has Inis told you I wanted to converse with you in private, Gasper?

GASP. Oh, yes, madam, and I took particular notice that it was to be in private.—Sure, says I, Mrs. Inis, Madam Victoria has not taken a fancy to me, and is going to break her mind.

VICT. Whimsical ! ha, ha ! suppose I should, Gasper ?

GASP. Why, then, madam, I should say fortune had used you dev'lish scurvily, to give me a grey beard in a livery. I know well enough that some young ladies have given themselves to grey beards in a gilded coach, and others have run away with a handsome youth in worsted lace ; they each had their apology ; but if you run away with me—pardon me, madam, I could not stand the ridicule.

VICT. Oh, very well ; but if you refuse to run away with me, will you do me another favour ?

GASP. Any thing you'll order, madam, except dancing a fandango.

VICT. You have seen my rich old uncle in the country ?

GASP. What, Don Sancho, who, with two-thirds of a century in his face, affects the misdemeanors of youth ; hides his baldness with amber locks, and complains of the tooth-ache, to make you believe that the two rows of ivory he carries in his head, grew there.

VICT. Oh, you know him, I find ; could you assume his character for an hour, and make love for him ? you know it must be in the stile of King Roderigo the First.

GASP. Hang it ! I am rather too near his own age ; to appear an old man with effect, one should not be above twenty ; 'tis always so on the stage.

VICT. Pho ! you might pass for Juan's grandson.

GASP. Nay, if your ladyship condescends to flatter me, you have me.

VICT. Then follow me, for Don Cæsar, I hear, is approaching—in the garden I'll make you acquainted with with my plan, and impress on your mind every trait of my uncle's character. If you can hit him off, the arts of Laura shall be foil'd, and Carlos be again Victoria's.

[Exit.

Enter Don CÆSAR, followed by OLIVIA.

CÆS. No, no, 'tis too late—no coaxings; I am resolv'd, I say.

OLIV. But it is not too late, and you shan't be resolv'd, I say. Indeed, now, I'll be upon my guard with the next Don—what's his name? not a trace of the Xantippe left.—I'll study to be charming.

CÆS. Nay, you need not study it, you are always charming enough, if you would but hold your tongue.

OLIV. Do you think so? then to the next lover I won't open my lips; I'll answer every thing he says with a smile, and if he asks me to have him, drop a court'sey of thankfulness.

CÆS. Pshaw! that's too much t'other way; you're always either above the mark or below it; you must talk, but talk with good humour. Can't you look gently and prettily, now, as I do? and say, "yes, Sir, and no, Sir; and 'tis very fine weather, Sir; and pray, Sir, were you at the ball last night? and I caught a sad cold the other evening; and, bless me! I hear Lucinda has run away with her footman, and Don Philip has married his housemaid."——That's the way agreeable ladies talk, you never hear any thing else.

OLIV. Very true; and you shall see me as agreeable as the best of 'em, if you won't give me a mother-in-law to snub me, and set me tasks, and to take up all the fine apartments, and send up your poor little Livy to lodge next the stars.

CÆS.

CÆs. Ha,—if thou wert but always thus soft and good-humour'd, no mother-in law in Spain, though she brought the Castiles for her portion, should have power to snub thee. But, Livy, the trial's at hand, for at this moment do I expect Don Vincentio to visit you. He is but just returned from England, and, probably, has yet heard only of your beauty and fortune; I hope it is not from you he will learn the other part of your character.

OLIV. This moment expect him! two new lovers in a day?

CÆs. Beginning already, as I hope to live; aye, I see 'tis in vain; I'll send him an excuse, and marry Marcella before night.

OLIV. Oh, no! upon my obedience, I promise to be just the soft civil creature you have described.

Enter SERVANT.

SER. Don Vincentio is below, Sir.

CÆs. I'll wait upon him—well, go and collect all your smiles and your simpers, and remember all I have said to you;—be gentle, and talk pretty little small talk, d'ye hear, and if you please him, you shall have the portion of a Dutch burgomaster's daughter, and the pin-money of a princess, you jade you. I think at last I have done it; the fear of this mother-in-law will keep down the fiend in her, if any thing can. [Exit.]

OLIV. Hah! my poor father, your anxieties will never end 'till you bring Don Julio:—Command me to sacrifice my petulence, my liberty to him, and Iphigenia herself, could not be more obedient. But what shall I do with this Vincentio?—I fear he is so perfectly harmoniz'd, that to put him in an ill temper will be impracticable.—

cable—I must try, however; if 'tis possible to find a discord in him, I'll touch the string. [Exit.

Another Apartment.

Enter VINCENTIO and CÆSAR.

VIN. Presto, presto, Signor! where is the Olivia?—not a moment to spare. I left off in all the fury of composition; minims and crotchets have been battling it through my head the whole day, and trying a semibreve in G sharp, has made me as flat as double F.

CÆS. Sharp and flat!—trying a semibreve!—oh—gad, Sir! I had like not to have understood you; but a semibreve is something of a demi-culverin, I take it; and you have been practising the art military.

VIN. Art military!—what, Sir! are you unacquainted with music?

CÆS. Music! oh I ask pardon; then you are fond of music—'ware of discords. [aside.]

VIN. Fond of it! devoted to it.—I compos'd a thing to-day in all the gusto of Sachini and the sweetness of Gluck. But this recreant finger fails me in composing a passage in E, octave: if it does not gain more elastic vigour in a week, I shall be tempted to have it amputated, and supply the shake with a spring.

CÆS. Mercy! amputate a finger to supply a shake!

VIN. Oh, that's a trifle in the road to reputation—to be talk'd of is the summum bonum of this life.—A young man of rank shou'd not glide through the world without a distinguish'd rage, or, as they call it in England—a hobby horse!

CÆS. A hobby horse!

VIN.

VIN. Yes ; that is, every man of figure determines on setting out in life, in that land of liberty, in what line to ruin himself ; and that choice is called his hobby horse. One, makes the turf his scene of action—another drives about tall phaetons to peep into their neighbour's garret windows ; and a third rides his hobby horse in parliament, where it jerks him sometimes on one side, and sometimes on the other ; sometimes in, and sometimes out, 'till at length he is jerk'd out of his honesty, and his constituents out of their freedom.

CÆS. Aye !—Well, 'tis a wonder that with such sort of hobby horses as these they should still outride all the world to the goal of glory. I wish we had a few of 'em to jerk Spain into some consideration.

VIN. This is all cantable ; nothing to do with the subject of the piece, which is Donna Olivia ;—pray give me the key note to her heart.

CÆS. Upon my word, Signor—to speak in your own phrase—I believe that note has never yet been sounded.—Ah ! here she comes ! look at her.—Isn't she a charming girl ?

VIN. Touching ! Musical I'll be sworn ! her very air is harmonious !

CÆS. [aside.] I wish thou may'st find her tongue so.

Enter Olivia, court'seys profoundly to each.

Daughter, receive Don Vincentio—his rank, fortune and merit, entitle him to be the heiress of a grandee ; but he is contented to become my son-in-law, if you can please him.

[Olivia court'seys again.]

VIN. Please me ! she entrances me ! Her presence thrills

thrills me like a cadenza of Pachierotti's, and every nerve vibrates to the music of her looks.

Her step andante gently moves,

Pianos glance from either eye ;

Oh how larghetto is the heart,

That charms so forté can defy !

DONNA OLIVIA, will you be contented to receive me as a lover ?

OLIV. Yes, Sir—No, Sir.

VIN. Yes, Sir ; no, Sir ! bewitching timidity !

CÆS. Yes, Sir, she's remarkably timid.—She's in the right cue, I see. [aside.]

VIN. 'Tis clear you have never travell'd—I shall be delighted to shew you England.—You will there see how entirely timidity is banish'd the sex. You must affect a mark'd character, and maintain it at all hazards.

OLIV. 'Tis a very fine day, Sir.

VIN. Madam !

OLIV. I caught a bad cold the other evening.—Pray was you at the ball last night ?

VIN. What ball, fair lady ?

OLIV. Bless me ! they say Lucinda has run away with her footman, and Don Philip has married his house-maid.—Now am I not very agreeable ? [apart to Cæsar.]

CÆS. Oh, such perverse obedience !

VIN. Really, Madam, I have not the honour to know Don Philip and Lucinda—nor am I happy enough entirely to comprehend you.

OLIV. No ! I only meant to be agreeable—but perhaps you have no taste for pretty little small talk ?

VIN. Pretty little small talk !

OLIV. A mark'd character you admire ; so do I ; I doat on it.—I wou'd not resemble the rest of the world in any thing.

VIN.

VIN. My taste to the fiftieth part of a crotchet !—
We shall agree admirably when we are married.

VIN. And that will be unlike the rest of the world, and therefore charming.

CÆS. [Aside.] It will do ! I have hit her humour at last—Why did'nt this young dog offer himself before ?

OLIV. I believe I have the honour to carry my taste that way farther than you, Don Vincentio. Pray now, what is your usual stile in living ?

VIN. My winters I spend in Madrid, as other people do. My summers I drawl through at my castle—

OLIV. As other people do !—and yet you pretend to taste and singularity, ha ! ha ! ha ! Good Don Vincentio, never talk of a mark'd character again.—Go into the country in July to smell roses and woodbines, when every body regales on their fragrance ! Now I wou'd rusti-cate only in winter, and my bleak castle shou'd be decorated with verdure and flowers, amidst the soft zephyrs of December.

CÆS. [Aside.] Oh, she'll go too far !

OLIV. On the leafless trees I wou'd hang green branches—the labour of silk worms, and therefore natural ; whilst my rose shrubs and myrtles shou'd be scented by the first perfumers in Italy—Unnatural indeed, but therefore singular and striking.

VIN. Oh, charming !—You beat me where I thought myself the strongest.—Wou'd they but establish new-papers here, to paragraph our singularities, we shou'd be the most envied couple in Spain.

CÆS. [Aside.] By St. Anthony, he is as mad as she is.

VIN. What say you, Don Cæsar ? Olivia and her winter garden, and I and my music.

OLIV.

OLIV. Music, did you say ! Music ! I am passionately fond of that !

CÆS. She has fav'd my life—I thought she was going to knock down his hobby horse. [aside.]

VIN. You enchant me ! I have the finest band in Madrid—My first violin draws a longer bow than Giardini ; my clarinets, my viol de gamba—Oh you shall have such concerts !

OLIV. Concerts ! Pardon me there—My passion is a single instrument.

VIN. That's carrying singularity very far indeed ! I love a crash ; so does every body of taste.

OLIV. But my taste isn't like every body's—my nerves are so particularly fine, that more than one instrument overpowers them.

VIN. Pray tell me the name of that one : I am sure it must be the most elegant and captivating in the world.—I am impatient to know it.—We'll have no other instrument in Spain, and I will study to become its master, that I may woo you with its music. Charming Olivia ! tell me, is it a harpsichord ? a piano forte ? a pentachord ? a harp ?

OLIV. You have it—you have it—a harp—yes, a Jew's harp, is to me the only instrument.—Are you not charm'd with the delightful h—u—m of its base ! running on the ear like the distant rumble of a state coach ? It presents the idea of vastness and importance to the mind. The moment you are its master—I'll give you my hand.

VIN. Da capo, Madam, da capo ! a Jew's harp !!

OLIV. Bless me, Sir, don't I tell you so ? Violins chill me—clarinets by sympathy hurt my lungs ; and, instead stead of maintaining a band under my roof, I wou'd not keep a servant who knew a bassoon from a flute, or could tell whether he heard a jig or a canzonetta.

CÆS. Oh thou perverse one ; you know you love concerts—you know you do ! [in great agitation.]

OLIV. I detest 'em ! It's vulgar custom that attaches people to the sound of fifty different instruments at once ; 'twould be as well to talk on the same subject in fifty different tongues. A band ! 'tis a mere olio of sound ; I'd rather listen to a three-string'd guittar, serenading a sempstresses in some neighbouring garret.

CÆS. Oh you !——Don Vincentio, this is nothing but perverseness—wicked perverseness.—Hussey !—didn't you shake when you mention'd a garret ? didn't bread and water and a step-mother come into your head at the same time ?

VINC. Piano, piano, good Sir ! Spare yourself all farther trouble. Should the Princess of Guzzarat, and all her diamond mines, offer themselves, I wou'd not accept them in lieu of my band—a band that has half ruined me to collect.—I wou'd have allowed Donna Olivia a blooming garden in winter ; I wou'd even have procur'd barrenness and snow for her in the dog-days ;—but—to have my band insulted !—to have my knowledge in music slighted !—to be rous'd from all the energies of composition by the drone of a Jew's harp ! I cannot breathe under the idea.

CÆS. Then—then you refuse her, Sir ?

VIN. I cannot use so harsh a word—I take my leave of the lady—Adieu, Madam—I leave you to enjoy your solos, whilst I fly to the raptures of a crash.

[Exit.

CÆS.

CÆSAR goes up to her and looks her in the face ; then goes off without speaking.

OLIV. Mercy ! that silent anger is terrifying—I read a young mother-in-law, and an old lady abbess, in every line of his face.

Enter VICTORIA.

OLIV. Well, you heard the whole, I suppose—heard poor unhappy me scorn'd and rejected.

VICT. I heard you in imminent danger ; and expected Signor Da Capo wou'd have snapp'd you up, in spite of caprice and extravagance.

OLIV. Oh they charm'd instead of scaring him.—I soon found that my only chance was to fall across his caprice.—Where is the philosopher who cou'd withstand that ?

VICT. But what, my good cousin, does all this tend to ?

OLIV. I dare say you can guess.—Penelope had never cheated her lovers with a never-ending web, had she not had an Ulysses.

VICT. An Ulysses ! what are you then married ?

OLIV. O, no, not yet !—but, believe me, my design is not to lead apes ; nor is my heart an icicle.—If you choose to know more, put on your veil, and slip with me through the garden to the Prado.

VICT. I can't indeed.—I am this moment going to dress en homme, to visit the impatient Portuguese.

OLIV. Send an excuse—for positively you go with me. Heaven and earth ! I am going to meet a man !—whom I have been fool enough to dream and think of these two years, and I don't know that ever he thought of me in his life.

D

VICT.

VICT. Two years discovering that?

OLIV. He has been abroad. The only time I ever saw him was at the Dutchess of Medina's—there were a thousand people; and he was so elegant, so careless, so handsome!—In a word, though he set off for France the next morning, by some witchcraft or other, he has been before my eyes ever since.

VICT. Was the impression mutual?

OLIV. He hardly notic'd me—I was then a bashful thing, just out of a convent, and shrunk from observation.

VICT. Why, I thought you were going to meet him?

OLIV. To be sure—I sent him a command this morning to be at the Prado. I am determined to find out if his heart is engaged, and if it is—VICT. You'll cross your arms, and crown your brow with willows.

OLIV. No, positively, not whilst we have myrtles.—I wou'd prefer Julio, 'tis true, to all his sex; but if he is stupid enough to be insensible to me, I shan't for that reason pine like a girl, on chalk and oatmeal.—No, no; in that case, I shall form a new plan, and treat my future lovers with more civility.

VICT. You are the only woman in love, I ever heard talk reasonably.

OLIV. Well, prepare for the Prado, and I'll give you a lesson against your days of widowhood. Don't you wish this the moment, Victoria? A pretty widow at four-and-twenty twenty has more subjects and a wider empire than the first monarch upon earth.—I long to see you in your weeds.

VICT. Never may you see them ! Oh, Olivia !—my happiness, my life, depend on my husband. The fond hope of still being united to him, gives me spirits in my affliction, and enables me to support even the period of his neglect, with patience. [Exeunt.

END OF THE SECOND ACT.

A C T III. S C E N E I.

A L O N G S T R E E T.

JULIO enters from a Garden Gate with precipitation ; a Servant within fastens the Gate.

JULIO.

YES, yes, bar the gate fast, Cerberus, lest some other curious traveller should stumble on your confines.— If ever I am so caught again——

GARCIA enters, going hastily across, JULIO seizes him.

Don Garcia, never make love to a woman in a veil.

GARC. Why so, prithee ? Veils and secrecy are the chief ingredients in a Spanish amour ; but in two years, Julio, thou art grown absolutely French.

JULIO. That may be ; but if ever I trust to a veil again, may no lovely, blooming beauty ever trust me. — Why dost know I have been an hour at the feet of a creature whose first birth-day must have been kept the latter end of the last century, and whose trembling, weak voice, I mistook for the timid cadence of bashful fifteen !

GARC. Ha, ha, ha !—What a happiness to have seen thee in thy raptures, petitioning for half a glance only, of the charms the envious veil conceal'd.

JULIO. Yes ; and when she unveil'd her Gothic countenance, to render the thing compleatly ridiculous, she began moralizing ; and positively would not let me out of the snare, 'till I had persuaded her she had work'd a conversion, version, and that I'd never make love—but in an honest way again.

GARC. Oh, that honest way of love-making is delightful, to be sure. I had a dose of it this morning ; but happily the ladies have not yet learnt to veil their tempers, though they have their faces.

Enter VINCENTIO.

VIN. Julio ! Garcia ! congratulate me !—Such an escape !

JULIO. What have you escap'd ?

VIN. Matrimony.

GARC. Nay, then our congratulations may be mutual.—I have had a matrimonial escape too, this very day. I was almost on the brink of the ceremony with the veriest Xantippe !

VIN. Oh, that was not my case—mine was a sweet creature, all elegance, all life.

JULIO. Then where's the cause of congratulation ?

VIN. Cause—why she's ignorant of music ! prefers a jig to a canzonetta, and a Jew's harp to a pentachord.

JULIO. Jew's harp !—Pho, prithee.

GARC. Had my nymph no other fault, I would pardon that, for she was lovely and rich.

VIN. Mine too was lovely and rich, and, I'll be sworn, as ignorant of scolding as of the gama ;—but not to know music !—

JULIO. Gentle, lovely, and rich—and ignorant only of music ?

GARC. A venial crime indeed ! if the sweet creature will marry me, she shall carry a Jew's harp always in her train, as a Scotch laird does his bagpipes. I wish you'd give me your interest.

VIN. Oh, most willingly, if thou hast so gross an inclination;—I'll name thee as a dull-soul'd, large fellow, to her father, Don Cæsar.

GARC. Cæsar! what Don Cæsar?

VIN. De Zuniga.

GARC. Impossible!

VIN. Oh, I'll answer for her mother. So much is De Zuniga her father, that he does not know a femibreve from a culverin.

GARC. The name of the lady?

VIN. Olivia.

GARC. Why you must be mad—that's my termagant.

VIN. Termagant!—ha! ha! ha! Thou hast certainly some vixen of a mistress, who infects thy ears towards the whole sex. Olivia is timid and elegant.

GARC. By Juno, there never existed such a scold.

VIN. By Orpheus, there never was a gayer temper'd creature—Spirit enough to be charming, that's all. If she lov'd harmony, I'd marry her to morrow.

JULIO. Ha, ha! what a ridiculous jangle! 'Tis evident you speak of two different women.

GARC. I speak of Donna Olivio, heiress to Don Cæsar de Zuniga.

VIN. I speak of the heiress of Don Cæsar de Zuniga, who is called Donna Olivia.

GARC. Sir, I perceive you mean to insult me.

VIN. Your perceptions are very rapid, Sir—but if you chuse to think so, I'll settle that point with you immediately—But, for fear of consequences, I'll fly home, and add the last bar to my concerto, and then meet you where you please.

JUL.

JULIO. Pho ! this is evidently misapprehension.—To clear the matter up, I'll visit the lady—if you'll introduce me, Vincentio ;—but you shall both promise to be govern'd in this dispute by my decision.

VIN. I'll introduce you with joy, if you'll try to persuade her of the necessity of music, and the charms of harmony.

GARC. Yes, she needs that—You'll find her all jar and discord.

JULIO. Come, no more Garcia—thou art but a sort of a male vixen thyself.—Melodious Vincentio, when shall I expect you ?

VIN. This evening.

JULIO. Not this evening ; I have engag'd to meet a goldfinch in a grove, then I shall have music, you rogue !

VIN. It won't sing at night.

JULIO. Then I'll talk to it till the morning, and hear it pour out its matins to the rising sun.—Call on me to-morrow, I'll then attend you to Donna Olivia, and declare faithfully the impression her character makes on me.—Come, Garcia, I must not leave you together, lest his crotchets and your minums, should fall into a crash of discords.

[Exeunt opposite sides.]

THE PRADO.

Enter CARLOS.

CAR. All hail to the powers of Burgundy ! Three flasks to my own share.—What sorrows can stand against three flasks of Burgundy ? I was a damn'd melanchol fellow this morning, going to shoot myself to get rid of my troubles.—Where are my troubles now ? Gone to the moon to look for my wits ; and there, I hope, they'll remain main together, if one cannot come back without t'other.—

But where is this indolent dog, Julio? He fit to receive appointments from ladies! Sure I have not miss'd the hour—No—but seven yet—[looking at his watch.]— Seven's the hour, by all the joys of Burgundy! The rogue must be here—let's reconnoitre.

Enter VICTORIA and OLIVIA, veil'd, from the top.

OLIV. Positively, mine's a pretty spark, to let me be first at the place of appointment. I have half resolv'd to go home again to punish him.

VICT. I'll answer for its being but half a resolution—to make it entire would be to punish yourself.—There's a solitary man—Is not that he?

OLIV. I think not.—If he'd please to turn his face this way—

VICT. That's impossible, while the loadstone is the other way.—He is looking at the woman in the next walk. Can't you disturb him?

OLIV. [Screams.] Oh! a frightful frog!

[Carlos turns.

VICT. Heav'ns, 'tis my husband.

OLIV. Your husband! Is that Don Carlos?

VICT. It is indeed.

OLIV. Why really, now I see the man, I don't wonder that you are in no hurry for your weeds.—He is moving towards us.

VICT. I cannot speak to him, and yet my soul flies to meet him.

CAR. Pray, lady, what occasioned that pretty scream?
I shrewdly suspect it was a trap.

OLIV. A trap! Ha! ha! ha!—a trap for you!

CAR.

CAR. Why not, Madam?—Zounds, a man six feet high, and three flasks of Burgundy in his head, is worth laying a trap for.

OLIV. Yes, unless he happens to be trapp'd before.—'Tis about two years since you was caught, I take it—Do keep farther off!—Odious! a married man!

CAR. The devil! Is it posted under every saint in the street, that I am a married man?

OLIV. No, you carry the marks about you; that rueful phiz could never belong to a batchelor.—Besides, there's an odd appearance on your temples—does your hat sit easily?

CAR. By all the thorns of matrimony, if—

OLIV. Poor man! how natural to swear by what one feels—but why were you in such haste to gather the thorns of matrimony? Bless us! had you but look'd about you a little, what a market might have been made of that fine, proper promising person of yours—

CAR. Confound thee, confound thee! If thou art a wife, may thy husband plague thee with jealousies, and thou never be able to give him cause for them; and if thou art a maid, may'st thou be an old one! [Going, meets Julio.] Oh, Julio, look not that way; there's a tongue will stun thee.

JULIO. Heav'n be prais'd! I love female prattle. A woman's tongue can never scare me.—Which of these two goldfinches makes the music?

CAR. Oh, this is as silent as a turtle—[taking Victoria's hand.—only coos now and then.—Perhaps you don't hate a married man, sweet one?

VICT. You guess right; I love a married man.

CAR.

CAR. Hah, say'st thou so ! wilt thou love me ?

VICT. Will you let me ?

CAR. Let thee, my charmer ! how I'll cherish thee for't.—What would I not give for thy heart !

VICT. I demand a price that, perhaps, you cannot give—I ask unbounded love ; but you have a wife.

CAR. And, therefore, the readier to love every other woman ;—'tis in your favour child.

VICT. Will you love me ever ?

CAR. Ever ! yes ever, 'till we find each other dull company, and yawn, and talk of our neighbours for amusement.

VICT. Farewell ! I suspected you to be a bad chapman, and that you would not reach my terms. [going]

CAR. Nay, I'll come to your terms if I can ;—but move this way ;—I am fearful of that wood-pecker at your elbow—should she begin again, her noise will scare all the pretty loves that are playing about my heart. Don't turn your head towards them ; if you like to listen to love tales, you'll meet fond pairs enough in this walk.

[forcing her gently off.]

JULIO. I really believe, though you deny it, that you are my destiny—that is, you fated me hither.—See, is not this your mandate ? [taking a letter from his pocket]

OLIV. Oh, delightful ! the scrawl of some chambermaid, or, perhaps, of your valet to give you an air—what is it signed ? Marriatornes ? Tomasa ? Sancha ?

JULIO. Nay, now I am convinced the letter is yours, since you abuse it ; so you may as well confess.

OLIV. Suppose I should, you can't be sure that I do not deceive you.

JULIO. True ; but there is one point in which I have made a vow not to be deceived ; therefore, the preliminary is, that you throw off your veil.

OLIV.

OLIV. My veil !

JULIO. Positively ! if you reject this article, our negotiation ends.

OLIV. You have no right to offer articles, unless you own yourself conquered.

JULIO. I own myself willing to be conquer'd, and have, therefore, a right to make the best terms I can.—Do you accede to the demand ?

OLIV. Certainly not.

JULIO. You had better.

OLIV. I protest I will not.

JULIO. [Aside] My life upon't I make you. Why, madam, how absurd this is—'tis reducing us to the situation of Pyramus and Thisbe, talking through a wall ;—yet 'tis of no consequence, for I know your features, as well as though I saw 'em.

OLIV. How can that be ?

JULIO. I judge of what you hide, by what I see—I could draw your picture.

OLIV. Charming ! pray begin the portrait.

JULIO. Imprimis, a broad high forehead, rounded at the top, like an old-fashion'd gateway.

OLIV. Oh, horrid !

JULIO. Little grey eyes, a sharp nose, and hair, the colour of rusty prunella.

OLIV. Odious !

JULIO. Pale cheeks, thin lips, and——

OLIV. Hold, hold, thou villifier. [throws off her veil, he sinks on one knee] There ! yes, kneel in contrition for your malicious libel.

JULIO. Say rather, in adoration.—What a charming creature !

OLIV.

OLIV. So, now for lies on the other side.

JULIO. A forehead form'd by the Graces ; hair, which Cupid would steal for his bow strings, were he not engag'd in shooting through those sparkling hazel circlets, which nature has given you for eyes ; lips ! that 'twere a sin to call so—they are fresh gather'd rose leaves, with the fragrant morning dew, still hanging on their rounded surface.

OLIV. Is that extemporaneous, or ready cut, for every woman who takes off her veil to you.

JULIO. I believe 'tis not extemporaneous, for nature, when she finish'd you, form'd the sentiment in my heart, and there it has been hid, 'till you, for whom it was form'd, called it into words.

OLIV. Suppose I should understand, from all this, that you have a mind to be in love with me ; wouldn't you be finely caught ?

JULIO. Charmingly caught ! if you'll let me understand, at the same time, that you have a mind to be in love with me.

OLIV. In love with a man ! heavens ! I never lov'd any thing but a squirrel !

JULIO. Make me your squirrel—I'll put on your chain, and gambol and play for ever at your side.

OLIV. But suppose you should have a mind to break the chain ?

JULIO. Then loosen it ; for, if once that humour seizes me, restraint won't cure it.—Let me spring and bound at liberty, and when I return to my lovely mistress, tired of all but her, fasten me again to your girdle, and kiss me while you chide, OLIV. Your servant—to encourage you to leave me again.

JULIO.

JULIO. No, to make returning to you, the strongest attraction of my life.—Why are you silent?

OLIV. I am debating whether to be pleased or displeased at what you have said.

JULIO. Well?

OLIV. You shall know when I have determined. My friend and yours are approaching this way, and they must not be interrupted.

JULIO. 'Twou'd be barbarous—we'll retire as far off as you please.

OLIV. But we retire separately, Sir,—that lady is a woman of honour, and this moment of the highest importance to her. You may, however, conduct me to the gate, on condition that you leave me instantly.

JULIO. Leave her instantly—oh, then I know my cue.
[Exit together at top.

Enter CARLOS, followed by VICTORIA, unveiled.

CAR. [Looking back on her] My wife!

VICT. Oh, heavens! I will veil myself again. I will hide my face for ever from you, if you will still feast my ears with those soft vows, which a moment since you poured forth so eagerly.

CAR. My wife!—making love to my own wife!

VICT. Why should one of the dearest moments of my life, be to you so displeasing.

CAR. So, I am caught in this snare, by way of agreeable surprize, I suppose.

VICT. Wou'd you cou'd think it so.

CAR. No, madam! by heav'n 'tis a surprize fatal to every hope with which you may have flattered yourself.—What am I to be followed, haunted, watched?

VICT. Not to upbraid you.—I follow'd you, because my

my castle without you seem'd a dreary desert.—Indeed, I will never upbraid you.

CAR. Generous assurance!—never upbraid me—no by heavens, I'll take care you never shall.—She has touch'd my soul, but I dare not yield to the impresson.—Her softness is worse than death to me. [aside]

VICT. Would I could find words to please you!

CAR. You cannot; therefore leave me, or suffer me to go without attempting to follow me.

VICT. Is it possible you can be so barbarous?

CAR. Do not expostulate; your first vow'd duty is obedience—that word so grating to your sex.

VICT. To me it was never grating—to obey you has been my joy; even now I will not dispute your will, though I feel, for the first time, obedience hateful. [going, and then turning back] Oh, Carlos! my dear Carlos! I go, but my soul remains with you. [Exit.]

CAR. Oh, horrible! had I not taken this harsh measure, I must have kill'd myself, for how could I tell her that I have made her a beggar? better she should hate, detest me! than that my tenderness should give her a prospect of felicity, which now she can never taste.—Oh, wine-created spirit! Where art thou now? Madness, return to me again; for reason presents me nothing but despair.

Enter JULIO, from the top.

JULIO. Carlos, who the devil can they be? my charming little witch was inflexible.—I hope yours has been more communicative.

CAR. Folly!—Nonsense! [Exit.]

JULIO. Folly!—Nonsense! What, a pretty woman's smile! ha, ha, ha! upon my soul it has more persuasion, and, consequently, more reason, than a logical disquisition
—but

—but these married fellows have neither taste nor joy.—
Humph—suppose my fair one should want to debaseme into such an animal;—she can't have so much villainy in her disposition: and yet, if she should? pho! it won't bear thinking about.—If I do so mad a thing, it must be as cowards fight, without daring to reflect on the danger.

Scene, an apartment in the House of Don VASQUEZ, MAR-CELLA's Father.

Enter CÆSAR and VASQUEZ.

CÆS. Well, Don Vasquez, and a—you—then I say, you have a mind that I should marry your daughter?

VASQ. It is sufficient, Signor, that you have signified to us your intention—my daughter shall prove her gratitude, in her attention to your felicity.

CÆS. Egad! now it comes to the push! [aside] hem, hem!—but just nineteen, you say.

VASQ. Exactly, the eleventh of last month.

CÆS. Pity it was not twenty.

VASQ. Why a year can make no difference, I should think.

CÆS. O, yes it does; a year's a great deal;—they are so skittish at nineteen.

VASQ. Those who are skittish at nineteen, I fear, you won't find much mended at twenty. Marcella is very grave, and a pretty little, plump, fair—

CÆS. Aye, fair, again! pity she isn't brown or olive —I like your olives.

VASQ. Brown and olive! you are very whimsical, my old friend.

CÆS. Why these fair girls are so stared at by the men, and the young fellows, now-a-days, have a damn'd impudent

pudent stare with them,—'tis very abashing to a woman—very distressing !

VASQ. Yes, so it is; but happily their distress is of that nature that it generally goes off in a fimmer. But come, I'll send Marcella to you, and she will—

CÆS. No, no, stay my good friend. [gasping] You are in a violent hurry.

VASQ. Why, truly, Signor, at our time of life, when we determine to marry, we have no time to lose.

CÆS. Why, that's very true, and so—oh ! St. Anthony, now it comes to the point—but there can be no harm in looking at her—a look won't bind us for better for worse. [aside] Well then—if you have a mind, I say, you may let me see her. Exit Vasquez.

CÆS. [Puts on his spectacles] Aye, here she comes—I hear her—trip, trip, trip ! I don't like that step. A woman should always tread steadily, with dignity, it awes the men.

Enter VASQUEZ, leading MARCELLA.

VASQ. There, Marcella, behold your future husband ; and remember that your kindness to him, will be the standard of your duty to me. Exit.

MARC. Oh, heavens ! [aside

CÆS. Somehow I am afraid to look round.

MARC. Surely he does not know that I am here !

[coughs gently.

CÆS. So—she knows how to give an item, I find.

MARC. Pray, Signor, have you any commands for me ?

CÆS. Hum !—not non plus'd at all. [looks around] Oh ! that eye, I don't like that eye.

MARC.

MARC. My father commanded me——

CÆS. Yes, I know—I know. [to her] Why, now I look again, there is a sort of a modest.—Oh, that smile! that smile will never do. [aside.]

MARC. I understand, Signor, that you have demanded my hand in marriage.

CÆS. Upon my word, plump to the point! [aside] Yes, I did a sort of—I can't say but that I did——

MARC. I am not insensible of the honour you do me, Sir, but—but——

CÆS. But!—What don't you like the thoughts of the match?

MARC. Oh, yes, Sir, yes—exceedingly. I dare not say no. [aside.]

CÆS. Oh, you do—exceedingly! What, I suppose, child, your head is full of jewels, and finery, and equipage? [with ill humour.]

MARC. No indeed, Sir.

CÆS. No, what then? what sort of a life do you expect to lead when you are my wife? what pleasures d'ye look forward to?

MARC. None!

CÆS. Hey!

MARC. I shall obey my father, Sir; I shall marry you; but I shall be most wretched! [weeps]

CÆS. Indeed!

MARC. There is not a fate I would not prefer;—but pardon me!

CÆS. Go on, go on, I never was better pleas'd

MARC. Pleas'd at my reluctance!

CÆS. Never, never better pleas'd in my life;—so you had really now, you young baggage, rather have me for a grandfather than a husband?

E

MARC.

MARC. Forgive my frankness, Sir,—a thousand times !

CÆS. My dear girl, let me kiss your hand.—Egad ! you've let me off charmingly. I was frightened out of my wits lest you should have taken as violent an inclination to the match, as your father has.

MARC. Dear Sir, you charm me.

CÆS. But hark ye ;—you'll certainly incur your father's anger, if I don't take the refusal entirely on myself, which I will do, if you'll only assist me in a little business I have in hand.

MARC. Any thing to shew my gratitude.

CÆS. You must know, I can't get my daughter to marry—there's nothing on earth will drive her to it, but the dread of a mother-in-law. Now, if you will let it appear to her, that you and I are driving to the goal of matrimony ; I believe it will do—what say you ? shall we be lovers in play ?

MARC. If you are sure it will be only in play.

CÆS. Oh, my life upon't—but we must be very fond, you know.

MARC. To be sure—exceedingly tender ; ha, ha, ha !

CÆS. You must smile upon me now and then roguishly ; and slide your hand into mine, when you are sure she sees you, and let me pat your cheek, and——

MARC. Oh, no farther pray—that will be quite sufficient.

CÆS. Gad, I begin to take a fancy to your rogue's face, now I'm in no danger—mayn't we—mayn't we salute sometimes, it will seem infinitely more natural.

MARC. Never ; such an attempt would make me fly off at once.

CÆS. Well, you must be lady governess in this business.—

finess.—I'll go home now, and fret madam, about her young mother-in-law—By'e sweeting!

MARC. By'e charmer!

CÆS. Oh, blefs its pretty eyes! [Exit.

MARC. Blefs its pretty spectacles! ha, ha, ha! enter into a league with a cross old father against a daughter! why how could he suspect me capable of so much treachery? I cou'd not answer it to my conscience. No, no I'll acquaint Donna Olivia with the plot; and, as in duty bound, we'll turn our arms against Don Cæsar.

[Exit.

END OF THE THIRD ACT.

E 2

ACT

A C T IV. S C E N E I.

D O N N A L A U R A ' S .

Enter LAURA and PEDRO.

LAURA.

WELL, Pedro ! hast thou seen Don Florio ?

PED. Yes, Donna.

LAU. How did he look when he read my letter ?

PED. Mortal well, I never see'd him look better—he'd got on a new cloak, and a——

LAU. Pho, blockhead ! did he look pleas'd ? did he kiss my name ? did he press the billet to his bosom with all the warmth of love ?

PED. No, he didn't warm it that way ; but he did another, for he put it into the fire.

LAU. How !

PED. Yes, and when I spoke, he started, for, I think, he had forgot that I was by—so, says he, go home and tell Donna Laura, I fly to her presence.

[She waves her hand for him to go.]

LAU. Is it possible ? so contemptuously destroy the letter in which my whole heart overflow'd with tenderness ? in which my upbraidings were mingled with the most passionate love ! But why do I question it ? has he ever treated me but with the most mortifying coldness, even whilst he pretended to be sensible of my charms ? I feel myself on the brink of hatred ; and, by all the agonies agonies I have felt, shou'd that passion be once rous'd.—

Oh, how idly I talk ! he is here ; his very voice pierces my heart. I dare not meet his eye thus discomposed.

Exit.

Enter VICTORIA, (in Men's Cloaths) preceded by SANCH.

SANCH. I will inform my mistress that you are here,
Don Florio, I thought she had been in this apartment.

Exit.

VICT. Now must I, with a mind torn by anxieties, once more assume the lover of my husband's mistress—of the woman who has robb'd me of his heart, and his children of their fortune. Sure my task is hard.—Oh, love !
Oh, married love assist me ! If I can, by any art, obtain from her that fatal deed, I shall save my little ones from ruin—and then——But I hear her step—[agitated, pressing her hand on her bosom] —There ! I have hid my griefs within my heart, and now for all the impudence of an accomplished cavalier !

[Sings an air——sets her hat in the glass——dances a few steps, &c. then runs to Laura, and seizes her hand.]

VICT. My lovely Laura !

LAU. That look speaks Laura lov'd as well as lovely.

VICT. To be sure ! Petrarch immortaliz'd his Laura by his verses, and mine shall be immortal in my passion.

LAU. I cannot conceive how you feed this immortal passion.

VICT. Oh, by thinking of you, and reading your letters, and——

LAU. My letters ! how often do you read them ?

VICT. A dozen times an hour ; drink each dear line with my eyes, whilst my lips drink chocolate ; place them every night under my pillow, and——

LAU. In the morning fling them into the fire.

VICT. Madam !

LAU. Oh, Florio, how deceitful ! I know not what enchantment binds me to thee.

VICT. Me ! my dear ! is all this to me ? [playing carelessly with the feather in her hat]

LAU. Yes, ingrate, thee !

VICT. Positively, Laura, you have these extravagancies so often, I wonder my passion can stand them. To be plain, those violences in your temper may make a pretty relief in the flat of matrimony, child, but they do not suit that state of freedom which is necessary to my happiness.—It was by such destructive arts as these you cured Don Carlos of his love.

LAU. Cured Don Carlos ! Oh, Florio ! wert thou but as he is !

VICT. Why, you don't pretend he loves you still ?

[eagerly]

LAU. Yes, most ardently and truly.

VICT. Hah !

LAU. If thou would'st persuade me that thy passion is real, borrow his words, his looks ;—be a hypocrite one dear moment, and speak to me in all the frenzy of that love, which warms the heart of Carlos.

VICT. The heart of Carlos !

LAU. Hah, that seem'd a jealous pang—it gives my hopes new life. [aside] Yes, Florio, he, indeed, knows what it is to love.—For me he forsook a beauteous wife ; nay, and with me he wou'd forsake his country.

VICT. Villain ! Villain !

LAU. Nay, let not the thought distress you thus ;—Carlos I despise—he is the weakest of mankind.

VICT.

VICT. 'Tis false, madam, you cannot despise him—Carlos the weakest of mankind! heavens! what woman cou'd resist him? Persuasion sits on his tongue, and love, almighty love, triumphant in his eyes!

LAU. This is strange; you speak of your rival with the admiration of a mistress.

VICT. Laura! it is the fate of jealousy, as well as love, to see the charms of its object, increas'd and heighten'd.—I am jealous,—jealous to distraction, of Don Carlos, and cannot taste peace, unless you'll swear never to see him more.—How nearly had I been betray'd! [aside.

LAU. I swear, joyfully swear, never to behold or speak to him again. When, dear youth! shall we retire to Portugal? we are not safe here.

VICT. You know I am not rich.—You must first sell the lands my rival gave you. [observing her with apprehension

LAU. 'Tis done—I have found a purchaser, and tomorrow the transfer will be finished.

VICT. [Aside] Ah! I have now then nothing to trust to but the ingenuity of Gasper.—There is reason to fear Don Carlos had no right in that estate, with which you supposed yourself endow'd.

LAU. No right! what can have given you those suspicions?

VICT. A conversation with Juan his steward—who assures me that his master never had an estate in Leon.

LAU. Never! what not by marriage?

VICT. Juan says so.

LAU. My blood runs cold—can I have taken pains to deceive myself—cou'd I think so I should be mad.

VICT. These doubts may soon be annihilated; or con-firm'd to certainty.—I have seen Don Sancho, the uncle of Victoria—he is now in Madrid—You have told me that he once profess'd a passion for you.

LAU. Oh, to excess ; but at that time I had another object.

VICT. Have you convers'd with him much ?

LAU. I never saw him nearer than from my Balcony, where he used to ogle me through a glass, suspended by a ribbon, like an order of knighthood ; he is weak enough to fancy it gives him an air of distinction, ha, ha ! But where can I find him ? I must see him.

VICT. Write him a billet, and I will send it to his lodgings.

LAU. Instantly.—Dear Florio, a new prospect opens to me—Don Sancho is rich and generous ; and, by playing on his passions, without yielding to them, his fortune may be a constant fund to us.—I'll dip my pen in flattery.

[Exit.

VICT. Base woman ! how can I pity thee, or regret the steps which my duty obliges me to take ? For myself, I wou'd not swerve from the nicest line of rectitude, nor wear the shadow of deceit—But for my children ! —Is there a parental heart that will not pardon me ?

[Exit.

SCENE, DON CÆSAR'S.

Enter OLIVIA and MINETTE

OLIV. Well, here we are in private—what is this charming intelligence of which thou art so full this morning ?

MIN. Why, Ma'am, as I was in the balcony that overlooks Don Vasquez's garden—Donna Marcella told me, me, that Don Cæsar had last night been to pay her a visit previous to their marriage, and——

OLIV. Their marriage ! How can you give me the intelligence with such a look of joy ? Their marriage !——what will become of me ?

MIN. Dear, Ma'am ! if you'll but have patience.—— She says that Don Cæsar and she are perfectly agreed.—— OLIV. Still with that smirking face——I can't have patience.

MIN. Then, Madam, if you won't let me tell the story, please to read it——here's a letter from Donna Marcella.

OLIV. Why did you not give it me at first ? [reads.]

MIN. Because I didn't like to be cut out of my story. If orators were oblig'd to come to the point at once, mercy on us ! what tropes and figures we shou'd lose !

OLIV. Oh, Minette ! I give you leave to smirk again——listen——[reads.] “ I am more terrified at the idea of becoming your father's wife, than you are in the expectation of a step-mother ; and Don Cæsar would be as loth as either of us.—He only means to frighten you into matrimony, and I have, on certain conditions, agreed to assist him ; but whatever you may hear, or see, be assur'd that nothing is so impossible, as that he shou'd become the husband of Donna Marcella.”—— Oh delightful girl ! how I love her for this !

MIN. Yes, Ma'am ; and if you'd had patience, I shou'd have told you that she's now here with Don Cæsar, in grave debate how to begin the attack, which must force you to take shelter in the arms of a husband.

OLIV. Ah, no matter how they begin it.—Let them amuse amuse themselves in raising batteries ; my reserv'd fire shall tumble them about their ears, in the moment my poor father is singing his Io's for victory.—But here come the lovers.—Well, I protest now, sixteen and sixty is a very comely fight—'Tis contrast gives effect to every thing—Lud ! how my father ogles ! I had no idea he was such a sort of man.—I am really afraid he isn't quite so good as he shou'd be.

Enter DON CÆSAR leading MARCELLA.

CÆS. H—um—Madam looks very placid ; we shall discompose her, or I am mistaken. [apart] So, Olivia, here's Donna Marcella come to visit you—though, as matters are, that respect was due from you.

OLIV. I am sensible of the condescension—My dear Ma'am, how very good this is. [taking her hand.]

CÆS. Yes, you'll think yourself wonderfully oblig'd, when you know all. [aside.] Pray, Donna Marcella, what do you think of these apartments ? The furniture and decorations are my daughter's taste ; wou'd you wish them to remain, or will you give orders to have them chang'd ?

MARC. Chang'd, undoubtedly ; I can have nobody's taste govern my apartments but my own.

CÆS. Ah, that touches—See how she looks. [apart.] They shall receive your orders.—You understand, I suppose, from this, that every thing is fix'd on between Donna Marcella and me ?

OLIV. Yes, Sir ; I understand it perfectly, and it gives me infinite pleasure.

CÆS. Eh ! pleasure !

OLIV. Entirely, Sir—

CÆS.

CÆS. Tol-de-rol ! Ah that won't do—that won't do.—You can't hide it.—You are frighten'd out of your wits at the thoughts of a mother-in-law—especially a young, gay, handsome one.

OLIV. Pardon me, Sir ; the thought of a mother-in-law was indeed disagreeable ; but her being young and gay qualifies it.—I hope, Ma'am, you'll give us balls, and the most spirited parties—You can't think how stupid we have been.—My dear father hates those things—but I hope now —

CÆS. Hey, hey, hey ! what's the meaning of all this ? Why, huffey, don't you know you'll have no apartment but the garret ?

OLIV. That will benefit my complexion, Sir, by mending my health. 'Tis charming to sleep in an elevated situation.

CÆS. Here ! here's an obstinate perverse flut !

OLIV. Bless me, Sir, are you angry that I look forwards to your marriage without murmuring ?

CÆS. Yes, I am—yes, I am—you ought to murmur, and you ought to—to—to—OLIV. Dear me ! I find love taken up late in life, has a bad effect on the temper—I wish, my dear papa, you had felt the influence of Donna Marcella's charms somewhat sooner.

CÆS. You do ! you do ! why this must be all put on.—This can't be real.

OLIV. Indeed, indeed it is ; and I protest your engagement with this lady has given me more pleasure than I have tasted ever since you began to tease me about a husband. You seem'd determin'd to have a marriage in the family ; family ; and I hope now I shall live in quiet, with my dear, sweet, young mother-in-law.

CÆs. Oh—oh [walking about.] Was there ever— She doesn't care for a mother-in-law !—Can't frighten her !

OLIV. Sure, my fate is very peculiar ; that being pleas'd with your choice, and submitting with humble duty to your will, shou'd be the cause of offence.

CÆs. Hussy ! I don't want you to be pleas'd with my choice—I don't want you to submit with humble duty to my will—Where I do want you to submit, you rebel—You are a—you are—But I'll mortify that wayward spirit yet. [Exit Don CÆsar and MARCELLA.]

MIN. Well, really, my master is in a piteous passion—he seems more angry at your liking his marriage, than at your refusing to be married yourself.—Wouldn't it have been better, Madam, to have affected discontent ?

OLIV. To what purpose ? but to lay myself open to fresh sollicitations, in order to get rid of the evil I pretended to dread ! Bless us ! nothing can be more easy than for my father to be gratified, if he were but lucky in the choice of a lover.

MIN. As much as to say, Madam, that there is—

OLIV. Why, yes, “as much as to say”—I see you are resolv'd to have my secret, Minette, and so—

Enter SERVANT.

SERV. There is a gentleman at the door, Madam, call'd Don Julio de Meleffina. He waits on you from Don Vincentio.

OLIV. Who ? Don Julio ! it cannot be—art thou sure of his name ?

SERV.

SERV. The servant repeated it twice—He is in a fine carriage, and seems to be a nobleman.

OLIV. Conduct him hither. [Exeunt Servant.]
I am astonish'd, I cannot see him.—I wou'd not have him know the incognita to be Olivia for worlds !—There is but one way. [aside.] Minette, ask no questions, but do as I order you—Receive Don Julio in my name ; call yourself the heiress of Don Cæsar, and on no account suffer him to believe that you are any thing else. [turning from her.]

I am amaz'd and confus'd !—It is impossible that he can have discover'd me—Perhaps he comes with offers to my father—then my interview last night did not give him those impressions I hop'd.—I am jealous of myself.—If it is so, his incognito shall never pardon a passion for the daughter of Don Cæsar. [Exit.]

MIN. So ! then, this is some new lover whom she is determined to disgust ; and fancies that making me pass for her, will compleat it. Perhaps her ladyship may be mistaken, though. [Looking thro' the wing] Upon my word, a sweet man ! Oh, lud, my heart beats with the very idea of his making love to me, even though he takes me for another—Stay, I think he sha'nt find me here—Standing in the middle of a room gives one's appearance no effect.—I'll enter upon him with an easy swim, or an engaging trip, or a—something that shall strike—the first glance is every thing. [Exit.]

Enter JULIO, preceded by Servant, who retires.

JULIO. Not here ! The ridiculous dispute between Garcia and Vincentio, gives me irresistible curiosity—though, if she is the character Garcia describes, I expect to

to be cuff'd for my impertinence—Here she comes!—
A pretty, little, smiling girl, 'faith, for a vixen.

Enter MINETTE, very affectedly.

MIN. Sir, your most obedient humble servant. You are Don Julio de Melessina. I am extremely glad to see you, Sir.

JULIO. [aside.] A very courteous reception!—You honour me infinitely, Madam—I must apologize for waiting on you without a better introduction—Don Vincentio promis'd to attend me, but a concert call'd him to another part of the town, at the moment I prepar'd to come hither.

MIN. A concert—Yes, Sir, he is very fond of music.

JULIO. He is, Madam:—You, I suppose, have a passion for that charming science?

MIN. Oh, yes, I love it mightily.

JULIO. [Aside.] This is lucky! I think I have heard, Donna Olivia, that your taste that way is peculiar; you are fond of a—faith I can hardly speak it. [aside—of a—Jew's harp. [smothering a laugh]

MIN. A Jew's harp! Mercy! What do you think a person of my birth and figure, can have such fancies as that? No, Sir, I love fiddles, French horns, tabors, and all the chearful, noisy instruments in the world.

JULIO. [Aside.] Vincentio must have been mad; and I as mad as him to mention it. Then you are fond of concerts, Madam?

MIN. Doat on 'em! I wish he'd offer me a ticket.

[aside.]

JULIO. [Aside.] Vincentio is clearly wrong.—Now to prove how far the other was right, in supposing her a vixen.

MIN.

MIN. There is a grand public concert, Sir, to be to-morrow. Pray do you go?

JULIO. I believe I shall have that pleasure, Madam.

MIN. My father, Don Cæsar, won't let me purchase a ticket: I think it's very hard.

JULIO. Pardon me, I think it's perfectly right.

MIN. Right! what to refuse me a trifling expence, that would procure me a great pleasure?

JULIO. Yes, doubtless—The ladies are too fond of pleasure.—I think Don Cæsar is exemplary.

MIN. Lord, Sir, you'd think it very hard if you were me, to be lock'd up all your life, and know nothing of the world but what you cou'd catch through the bars of your balcony.

JULIO. Perhaps I might; but as a man, I am convinc'd 'tis right. Daughters and wives should be equally excluded those destructive haunts of dissipation.—Let them keep to their embroidery, nor ever presume to shew their faces but at their own fire sides.—This will bring out the Xantippe, surely. [aside.]

MIN. Well, Sir, I don't know—to be sure, home, as you say, is the fittest place for women.—For my part, I cou'd live for ever at home. I am determin'd he shall have his way—who knows what may happen. [aside.]

JULIO. [Aside.] By all the powers of caprice, Garcia is as wrong as the other!

MIN. I delight in nothing so much as in sitting by my father, and hearing his tales of old times—and I fancy, when I have a husband, I shall be more happy to sit and listen to his stories of present times.

JULIO. Perhaps your husband, fair lady, might not be inclined inclined so to amuse you.—Men have a thousand delights that call them abroad ; and probably your chief amusements wou'd be counting the hours of his absence, and giving a tear to each as it pass'd.

MIN. Well, he shou'd never see 'em, however. I wou'd always smile when he enter'd, and if he found my eyes red, I'd say I had been weeping over the history of the unfortunate damsel, whose true love hung himself at sea, and appear'd to her afterwards in a wet jacket.—Sure this will do. [aside.]

JULIO. I am every moment more astonish'd ! Pray, Madam, permit me a question—Are you really—yet I cannot doubt it—are you really Donna Olivia, the daughter of Don Cæsar, to whom Don Garcia and Don Vincentio, had lately the honour of paying their addresses ?

MIN. Am I Donna Olivia ! ha, ha, ha ! what a question ! Pray, Sir is this my father's house ?—are you Don Julio ?

JULIO. I beg your pardon ; but, to confess, I had heard you describ'd as a lady who had not quite so much sweetness, and——

MIN. Oh, what you had heard that I was a termagant, I suppose——'Tis all slander, Sir—There is not in Madrid, though I say it, a sweeter temper than my own ; and though I have refus'd a good many lovers, yet if one was to offer himself, that I cou'd like——

JULIO. You wou'd take pity, and reward his passion. Lovely Donna Olivia, how charming is this frankness !——'tis a little odd, though ! [aside.]

MIN. Why, I believe, I shou'd take pity, for it always seem'd to me to be very hard-hearted to be cruel to a lover that one likes, because in that case one shou'd—— a——You know, Sir, the sooner the affair is over, the better for both parties.

JULIO. What the deuce does she mean?—Is this Garcia's sour fruit?

CÆSAR, without.

Olivia!—Olivia!

MIN. Bless me, I hear my father! Now, Sir, I have a particular fancy that you shou'd not tell him, in this fir-visit, your design.

JULIO. Madam! my design!

MIN. Yes, that you will not speak out, 'till we have had a little further conversation, which I'll take care to give you an opportunity for very soon.—He'll be here in a moment—Now, pray Don Julio, go—If he shou'd meet you, and ask who you are, you can say that you are—you may say that you came on a visit to my maid, you know.

JULIO. I thank you, Madam—[aloud.]—for my dis-mission—[aside.] I never was in such peril in my life.—
I believe she has a license in her pocket, a priest in her closet, and the ceremony by heart. [Exit.]

END OF THE FOURTH ACT.

F

ACT

A C T V. S C E N E I.

D O N C A R L O S ' S .

CARLOS discover'd writing.

CARLOS, [tearing paper, and rising.]

IT is in vain ! Language cannot furnish me with terms to soften to Victoria the horrid transaction. Cou'd she see the compunctions of my soul, her gentle heart wou'd pity me——But what then ? She's ruin'd ! My children are undone ! Oh ! the artifices of one base woman, and my villainy to another most amiable one, has made me unfit to live.—I am a wretch who ought to be blotted from society.

Enter PEDRO hastily.

PED. Sir, Sir.

CAR. Well !

PED. Sir, I have just met Don Florio ; he ask'd if my mistress was at home, so I guesses he is going to our house, and so I run to let you know—for I loves to keep my promises, though I am deadly afraid of some mischief.

CAR. You have done well.—Go home, and wait for me at the door, and admit me without noise. [Exit Pedro.] At least then, I shall have the pleasure of revenge ; I'll punish that harlot by sacrificing her paramour in her arms—and then——Oh !

[Exit.

Scene

Scene changes to DONNA LAURA'S.

Enter LAURA with precipitation, followed by VICTORIA.

LAU. 'Tis his carriage !—How successful was my letter ! This, my Florio, is a most important moment.

VICT. It is indeed ; and I will leave you to make every advantage of it. If I am present, I must witness condescensions from you, that I shall not be able to bear, though I know them to be but affected.—Now, Gasper, play thy part well, and save Victoria ! [aside.]

[Exit.]

LAU. This tender jealousy is dear to me !—Keep in the saloon. Here comes the dotard.

Enter GASPER, dressed as an old Beau, two Servants follow him, and take off a rich cloak.

GASP. Take my cloak ; and, d'ye hear, Ricardo, go home and bring the eider-down cushions for the coach, and tell the fellow not to hurry me post through the streets of Madrid. I have been jolted from side to side, like a pippin in a mill stream.—Drive a man of my rank, as he wou'd a city vintner and his fat wife, going to a bull fight !—Hah, there she is ! [looking through a glass, suspended by a red ribbon.]—there she is ! Charming Donna Laura, let me thus at the shrine of your beauty—[makes an effort to kneel, and falls on his face ; Laura assists him to rise.]Fye, fye, those new shoes !—they have made me skate all day, like a Dutchman on a canal, and now—Well, you see how profound my adoration is, Madam.—Common lovers kneel ; I was prostrate.

LAU. You do me infinite honour.—Disgustful wretch !

GASP. But how con'd you be so barbarous, to leave me at Valencia, without granting me one interview nearer than your balcony ?

LAU. I will be ingenuous—it was female artifice. I knew you wou'd follow me ; and how cou'd I resist the triumph of shewing that I led in my chains the illustrious Don Sancho ?

GASP. Oh you dear charming—But stay [searching his pockets.]—Bless me, what a careless fellow I am ! I had a casket, with some diamonds in it—a necklace, and a few trifles, which I meant to have had the honour of placing on your toilette—Left it at home—Oh, my giddy pate !

LAU. You are always elegant, Don Sancho. I'll send my servant.—Pedro ! [calling.]

GASP. No, no, to-morrow. It will be an excuse for me to come to morrow.—I shall often want excuses.

LAU. My wishes shall always be your excuse, but to-morrow be it then. You are thinner than you were, Don Sancho.—I protest, now I observe you, you are much alter'd.

GASP. Aye, Madam—Fretting. Your absence threw me into a fever, and that destroy'd my bloom :—You see I look almost a middle-aged man, now.

LAU. No, really ; far from it, I assure you.—The fop is as wrinkled as a baboon. [aside.]

GASP. Then, jealousy, that gave me a jaundice. My niece's husband, I hear, Don Carlos, has been my happy rival—Oh, my blade will hardly keep in its scabbard, when I think of him.

LAU. Think no more of him—He has been long banish'd nish'd my thoughts, be assured. I wonder you gave your niece to him, with such a fortune.

GASP. Gave! She gave herself; and as to fortune, ~~she~~ had not a pistole from me.

LAU. 'Twas indeed unnecessary, with so fine an estate as she had in Leon.

GASP. My niece an estate in Leon! Not enough to give shelter to a field mouse; and if he has told you so, he is a braggart.

LAU. Told me so—I have the writings; he has made over the lands to me.

GASP. Made over the lands to you.—Oh a deceiver! I begin to suspect a plot. Pray let me see this extraordinary deed. [She runs to a cabinet.] A plot, I'll be sworn.

LAU. Here is the deed which made that estate mine forever. No, Sir, I will intrust it in no hand but my own—Yet look over me, and read the description of the lands.

GASP. [Reading through his glass.] H—m—m—: “In the vicinage of Rosalva, bounded on the west by the river—h—m—m, on the east by the forest——” Oh, an artful dog! I need read no further; I see how the thing is.

LAU. How, Sir!—but hold—Stay a moment—I am breathless with fear.

GASP. Nay, Madam, don't be afraid! 'Tis my estate—that's all—the very castle where I was born, and which I never did, nor ever will bestow on any Don in the two Castiles. Dissembling rogue! Bribe you with a fictitious title to my estate, ha, ha, ha!

LAU. [Aside.] Curses follow him! The villain I employ'd ploy'd, must have been his creature—His reluctance all art—and, whilst I believ'd myself undoing him, was duped myself!

GASP. Cou'd you suppose I'd give Carlos such an estate for running away with my niece? No, no, the vineyards, and the corn-fields, and the woods of Rosalva, are not for him.—I've somebody else in my eye—in my eye, observe me—to give those to ;---can't you guess who it is?

LAU. No, indeed!—He gives me a glimmering that saves me from despair. [aside.]

GASP. I won't tell you, unless you'll bribe me.—I won't indeed—[kisses her cheek.] There, now I'll tell you—They are all for you.—Yes, this estate, to which you have taken such a fancy, shall be yours.—I'll give you the deeds, if you'll promise to love me, you little, cruel thing!

LAU. Can you be serious?

GASP. I'll sign and seal to-morrow.

LAU. Noble Don Sancho! Thus then I annihilate the proof of his perfidy and my weakness. Thus I tear to atoms his detested name; and as I tread on these, so would I on his heart.

Enter VICTORIA.

VICT. My children then are fav'd! [in transport.]

LAU. [Apart.] Oh, Florio, 'tis as thou said'st—Carlos was a villain, and deceiv'd me.—Why this strange air? Ah, I see the cause—You think me ruin'd, and will abandon me.—Yes, I see it in thy averted face; thou dar'st not meet my eyes.—If I misjudge thee, speak!

VICT. Laura, I cannot speak.—You little guess the emotions of my heart.—Heav'n knows, I pity you!

LAU.

LAU. Pity ! Oh, villain ! and has thy love already snatch'd the form of pity ? Base, deceitful——

CARLOS without.

CAR. Stand off, loose your weak hold ; I'm come for vengeance !

Enter CARLOS.

Where is this youth ? Where is the blooming rival, for whom I have been betray'd ? Hold me not, base woman ! In vain the stripling flies me ; for, by Heav'n, my sword shall in his bosom write its master's wrongs !

VICTORIA first goes towards the flat, then returns, takes off her hat, and drops on one knee.

VICT. Strike, strike it here ! Plunge it deep into that bosom already wounded by a thousand stabs, keener and more painful than your sword can give.—Here lives all the gnawing anguish of love betray'd ; here live the pangs of disappointed hopes, hopes sanctified by holiest vows, which have been written in the book of Heav'n.—Hah ! he sinks.—[She flies to him.—Oh ! my Carlos ! My beloved ! my husband ! forgive my too severe reproaches ; thou art dear, yet dear as ever, to Victoria's heart !

CAR. [Recovering.] Oh, you know not what you do—you know not what you are.—Oh, Victoria, thou art a beggar !

VICT. No, we are rich, we are happy ! See there, the fragments of that fatal deed, which had I not recover'd, we had been indeed undone ; yet still not wretched, cou'd my Carlos think so !

CAR. The fragments of the deed ! the deed which that base woman——

VICT. Speak not so harshly.—To you, Madam, I fear, I seem reprehensible ; yet when you consider my duties as wife and mother, you will forgive me.—Be not afraid of poverty—a woman has deceiv'd, but she will not desert you !

LAU. Is this real ? Can I be awake ?

VICT. Oh, may'st thou indeed awake to virtue !—
You have talents that might grace the highest of our sex be no longer unjust to such precious gifts, by burying them in dishonour.—Virtue is our first, most awful duty ; bow, Laura ! bow before her throne, and mourn in ceaseless tears, that ever you forgot her heav'nly precepts !

LAU. So, by a smooth speech about virtue, you think to cover the injuries I sustain. Vile, insinuating monster !
—but thou know'st me not.—Revenge is sweeter to my heart than love ; and if there is a law in Spain to gratify that passion, your virtue shall have another field for exercise. [Exit.

GASP. No, no ; you'll find no help in the law, charmer ! However, the long robes are rich—get amongst them ; their gravities may administer to your avarice, though not to your revenge.

CAR. [Turning towards Victoria.] My hated rival, and my charming wife ! How many sweet mysteries have you to unfold !—Oh, Victoria ! my soul thanks thee, but I dare not yet say I love thee, 'till ten thousand acts of watchful tenderness, have prov'd how deep the sentiment's engrav'd.

VICT. Can it be true that I have been unhappy ?—
But the mysteries, my Carlos, are already explain'd to you—Gasper's resemblance to my uncle—

GASP. Yes, Sir, I was always apt at resemblances—
In our plays at home, I am always Queen Cleopatra—
You know she was but a gypsey Queen, and I hits her off to a nicety.

CAR. Come, my Victoria—Oh, there is a painful pleasure in my bosom—To gaze on thee, to listen to, and love thee, seems like the bliss of angels cheering whispers to repentant sinners !

[Exit Carlos and Victoria.
GASP.

GASP. Lord help 'em ! how easily the women are taken in !—Here's a wild rogue has plagu'd her heart these two years, and a whip syllabub about angels and whispers clears scores.—'Tis pity but they were a little—tho', now I think on't, the number of these gentle fair ones is so very small, that if it was lessen'd, the two sexes might be confounded together, and the whole world be suppos'd of the masculine gender. [Exit.

SCENE, THE PRADO.

Enter MINETTE.

MIN. Ah, here comes the man at last, after I have been fauntering in sight of his lodgings these two hours.—Now, if my scheme takes, what a happy person I shall be ! and sure, as I was Donna Olivia to-day, to please my lady, I may be Donna Olivia to-night, to please myself. I'll address him as the maid of a lady who has taken a fancy to him, then convey him to our house—then retire, and then come in again, and with a vast deal of confusion, confess I sent my maid for him. If he should dislike my forwardness, the censure will fall on my lady ; if he should be pleas'd with my person, the advantage will be mine. But perhaps he's come here on some wicked frolic or other.—I'll watch him at a distance before I speak. [Exit.

Enter JULIO.

JULIO. Not here, 'faith ; though she gave me last night but a faint refusal, and I had a right, by all the rules of gallantry, to construe that into an assent.—Then she's a jilt—Hang her, I feel I am uneasy—The first woman that ever gave me pain.—I am ashamed to perceive that this spot has attractions for me, only because it was here I convers'd with her. 'Twas here the little syren, con-conscious of her charms, unveil'd her fascinating face.—

'Twas here——

Enter GARCIA and VINCENTIO.

GARC. 'Twas here that Julio, leaving champagne untasted, and songs of gallantry unsung, came to talk to the whistling branches.

VIN. 'Twas here that Julio, flying from the young and gay, was found in doleful meditation——[altering his tone.]—on a wench, for a hundred ducats !

GARC. Who is she ?

JULIO. Not Donna Olivia, Gentlemen ; not Donna Olivia.

GARC. We have been seeking you, to ask the event of your visit to her.

JULIO. The event has prov'd that you have been most grossly dup'd.

VIN. I knew that—Ha, ha, ha !

JULIO. And you likewise, I know that—Ha, ha ha !
——The fair lady, so far from being a vixen, is the very essence of gentleness. To me, so much sweetness in a wife, wou'd be downright maukish—I like the little acerbities which flow from quick spirits, and a consciousness of power.—One may as well marry a looking-glass as a woman who constantly reflects back one's own sentiments, and one's own whims.

VIN. Well, but she's fond of a Jew's harp.

JULIO. Detests it ; she would be as fond of a Jew.

GARC. Pho, pho, this is a game at cross purposes ;—
Let us all go to Don Caesar's together, and compare opinions on the spot.

JULIO. I'll go most willingly—but it will be only to cover you both with confusion, for being the two men in Spain most easily impos'd on. [All going.]

Enter

Enter MINETTE.

MIN. Gentlemen, my lady has sent me for one of you, pray which of you is it?

JULIO. [Returning.] Me, without doubt, child.

VIN. I don't know that.

GARC. Look at me, my dear, don't you think I am the man?

MIN. Let me see—a good air, and well made, you are the man for a dancer.—[to Garcia] Well dress'd, and nicely put out of hands—you are the man for a bandbox. [to Vincentio] Handsome and bold—you are the man for my lady. [to Julio]

JULIO. My dear little Iris, here's all the gold in my pocket.—Gentlemen, I wish you a good night—I am your very obedient, humble—[stalking by them with his arm round Minette.]

GARC. Pho, prithee, don't be a fool. Are we not going to Donna Olivia?

JULIO. Donna Olivia must wait, my dear boy; we can decide about her to-morrow. Come along, my little dove of Venus! [Exit.]

GARC. What a rash fellow it is! ten to one but this is some common business, and he'll be robb'd and murder'd—they take him for a stranger.

VIN. Let's follow, and see where she leads him.

GARC. That's hardly fair, however, as I think there's danger, we will follow. [Exit.]

SCENE, DON CÆSAR'S

Enter OLIVIA and SERVANT.

OLIV. Bring me my veil and follow me to the Prado.

[Exit Servant.]

Julio

Julio will certainly be there—he has too much breeding not to translate my positive denial into assent—at least I must convince myself. If I see him compleatly vanquish'd, I can, by the most unlucky chance in the world, drop a card with my name, and then all the rest follows in course. [Exit.]

Enter MINETTE and JULIO.

MIN. There, Sir, please to sit down, 'till my lady is ready to wait on you—she won't be long. . . . I'm sure she's out, and I may do great things before she returns. [aside]
[Exit.]

JULIO. Through fifty back lanes, a long garden, and a narrow stair-case, into a superb apartment—all that's in the regular way; as the Spanish women manage it, one intrigue is too much like another, whilst the sprightly dames of Paris have the art of giving the same intrigue every day a new air. Now, presently, in comes a stately dame with a veil on; she tells me, she fears I have but a slight opinion of her virtue; I make her an answer about her beauty, and, after a dozen or two entreaties and denials, off comes her veil. A fat matron, perhaps of forty—I swear she's a Hebe—she thinks me very obliging, and I find her very grateful; and this is the epitome of half the amours in Madrid. If it was not now and then for the little lively fillip of a jealous husband or brother, which obliges one to leap from a window, or crawl, like a cat, along the gutters, there would be no bearing the ennui. Ah! ah! but this promises novelty; [looking through the wing] a young girl and an old man—wife or daughter? They are coming this way. My lovely incognita, by all that's propitious! Why did not some kind spirit spirit whisper to me my happiness? but hold—she can't mean to treat the old gentleman with a fight of me.

[goes behind the sofa.]

Enter CÆSAR and OLIVIA.

CÆs. No, no, Madam, no going out—give me your veil; that will be useless 'till you put it on for life. There, madam, this is your apartment, your house, your garden, your assembly, 'till you go to your convent. Why, how impudent you are, to look thus unconcern'd!—Can hardly forbear laughing in my face!—Very well—very well!

[Exit, double locking the door.]

OLIV. Ha, ha, ha! I'll be even with you, my dear father, if you treble lock it. I'll stay here two days, without once asking for my liberty, and you'll come the third, with tears in your eyes, to take me out.—He has forgot that door leading to the garden—but I vow I'll stay, [sitting down] I can make the time pass pleasantly enough.

JULIO. I hope so. [looking over the back of the sofa.]

OLIV. Heav'n and earth!

JULIO. My dear creature, why are you so alarmed; am I here before you expected me? [coming round.]

OLIV. Expected you!

JULIO. Oh, this pretty surprize! Come, let us sit down, I think your father was very obliging to lock us in together.

OLIV. Sir, Sir! my father! [calling at the door.]

CÆs. [without] Aye, 'tis all in vain—I won't come near you. There you are, and there you may stay.—I shan't return, make as much noise as you will.

JULIO. Why are you not asham'd that your father has so much more consideration for your guest than you have?

OLIV.

OLIV. My guest ! how is it possible he can have discovered me ! [aside.]

JULIO. Pho, this is carrying the thing further than you need—if there was a third person here, it might be prudent.

OLIV. Why, this assurance, Don Julio, is really—

JULIO. The thing in the world you are most ready to pardon.

OLIV. Upon my word I don't know how to treat you.

JULIO. Consult your heart !

OLIV. I shall consult my honour.

JULIO. Honour is a pretty thing to play with, but when spoken with that very grave face, after having sent your maid to bring me here, is really more than I expected. I shall be in an ill humour presently—I won't stay if you treat me thus.

OLIV. Well, this is superior to every thing ! I have heard that men will slander women privately to each other, 'tis their common amusement, but to do it to one's face !—and you really pretend that I sent for you ?

JULIO. Ha, ha, ha ! Well, if it obliges you, I will pretend that you did not send for me ; that your maid did not conduct me hither, nay, that I have not now the supreme happiness—— [catching her in his arms.]

Enter MINETTE, screams and runs out.

JULIO. Donna Olivia de Zuniga ! how the devil came she here ?

OLIV. [Aside] That's lucky ! Olivia, my dear friend, why do you run away ? Keep the character, I charge you. [apart to Minette] Be still Olivia !

MIN.

MIN. Oh! dear madam! I was—I was so frighten'd when I saw that gentleman.

OLIV. Oh, my dear, it's the merriest pretty kind of gentleman in the world; he pretends that I sent my maid for him into the streets, ha, ha!

JULIO. That's right, always tell a thing yourself, which you wou'd not have believ'd.

MIN. It is the readiest excuse for being found in a lady's apartment, however. Now will I swear I know nothing of the matter. [aside.]

OLIV. Now, I think it a horrid poor excuse, he has certainly not had occasion to invent reasons for such impertinencies often. Tell me that he has made love to you to-day. [apart.]

MIN. I fancy that he has had occasion to excuse impertinencies often;—his impertinence to me to-day—

JULIO. To you, madam?

MIN. Making love to me, my dear, all the morning—could hardly get him away he was so desirous to speak to my father. Nay, Sir, I don't care for your impatience.

JULIO. [Aside] Now wou'd I give a thousand pistoles if she were a man!

OLIV. Nay, then, this accidental meeting is fortunate—pray, Don Julio, don't let my presence prevent your saying what you think proper to my friend—shall I leave you together?

JULIO. [Apart] To contradict a lady on such an assertion wou'd be too gross; but, upon my honour, Donna Olivia is the last woman upon earth who cou'd inspire me me with a tender idea. Find an excuse to send her away, my angel, I entreat you. I have a thousand things to say, and the moments are too precious to be given to her.

OLIV. I think so too, but one can't be rude, you know. Come, my dear, sit down, [seating herself] have you brought your work?

JULIO. The devil! what can she mean? [pushing himself between Minette and the sofa] Donna Olivia, I am sorry to inform you that my physician has just been sent for to your father, Don Cæsar.—The poor gentleman was seized with a vertigo.

OLIV. Vertigocs! Oh, he has 'em frequently you know. [to Minette.]

MIN. Yes, and they always keep me from his sight.

JULIO. Did ever one women prevent another from leaving her at such a moment before? I really, madam, cannot comprehend——

CÆSAR without.

It is impossible—impossible, gentlemen? Don Julio cannot be here.

JULIO. Hah, who's that?

Enter CÆSAR, GARCIA, and VINCENTIO.

GARC. There! did we not tell you so? we saw him enter the garden.

CÆS. What can be the meaning of all this? A man in my daughter's apartment! [attempting to draw.]

GARC. Hold, Sir! Don Julio is of the first rank in Spain, and will unquestionably be able to satisfy your honour, without troubling your sword.—We have done mischief, Vincentio!

[apart.]

JULIO.

JULIO. [to Olivia] They have been cursedly impertinent ! but I'll bring you off, never fear, by pretending a passion for your busy friend, there.

CÆS. Satisfy me then in a moment ; speak, one of you.

JULIO. I came here, Sir, by the merest accident.—The garden door was open, curiosity led me to this apartment.—You came in a moment after, and very civilly lock'd me in with your daughter.

CÆS. Lock'd you in ! why then, did you not, like a man of honour, cry out ?

JULIO. The lady cried out, Sir, and you told her you would not return ; but when Donna Olivia de Zuniga entered, for whom I have conceived a most violent passion——

CÆS. A passion for her ! Oh, let me hear no more on't.—A passion for her ! You may as well entertain a passion for the untameable hyæna.

GARC. There, Vincentio, what think you now ? Xantippe or not !

VIN. I am afraid I must give up that—but pray support me as to this point, Don Cæsar ; is not the lady fond of a Jew's harp ?

CÆS. Fond ! She's fond of nothing, but playing the wixen ; there is not such a fury upon earth.

JULIO. These are odd liberties, with a person who does not belong to him.

CÆS. I'll play the hypocrite for her no more ; the world shall know her true character, they shall know——but ask her maid there.

JULIO. Her maid !

MIN. Why, yes, Sir, to say truth, I am but Donna Olivia's maid, after all.

OLIV. [Apart] Dear Minette! speak for me, or I am now ruin'd.

MIN. I will, ma'am.—I must confess, Sir, [going up to Julio] there never was so bitter a temper'd creature, as my lady is. I have borne her humours for two years; I have seen her by night and by day. [Olivia pulls her sleeve, impatiently] I will, I will! [to Olivia] and this I am sure, that if you marry her, you'll rue the day every hour the first month, and hang yourself the next. There, madam, I have done it roundly now.

OLIV. I am undone.—I am caught in my own snare.

[aside.]

CÆS. After this true character of my daughter, I suppose, Signor, we shall hear no more of your passion; so let us go down, and leave madam to begin her penance.

JULIO. My ideas are totally confus'd.—You Donna Olivia de Zuniga, and the person I thought you, her maid! something too flattering darts across my mind.

CÆS. If you have taken a fancy to her maid, I have nothing farther to say, but as to that violent creature.—

JULIO. Oh, do not prophane her.—Where is that spirit which you tell me of? Is it that which speaks in modest, conscious blushes on her cheeks? Is it that which bends her lovely eyes to earth?

CÆS. Ay, she's only bending 'em to earth, considering how to afflict me with some new obstinacy—she'll break out like a tygres in a moment.

JULIO. It cannot be—are you, charming woman! such a creature?

OLIV. Yes, to all mankind—but one. [looking down.]

JULIO. But one! Oh, might that excepted one, be me!

OLIV

OLIV. Wou'd you not fear to trust your fate with her, you have cause to think so hateful?

JULIO. No, I'd blefs the hour that bound my fate to her's—permit me, Sir, to pay my vows to this fair vixen.

CÆS. What are you such a bold man as that? Pho, but if you are, 'twill be only lost time—she'll contrive some way or other, to return your vows upon your hands.

OLIV. If they have your authority, Sir, I will return them—only with my own.

CÆS. What's that! what did she say? my head is giddy with surprize.

JULIO. And mine with rapture. [catching her hand.]

CÆS. Don't make a fool of me, Olivia.—Wil't marry him?

OLIV. When you command me, Sir.

CÆS. My dear Don Julio, thou art my guardian angel—shall I have a son-in-law at last? Garcia, Vincentio, cou'd you have thought it?

GARC. No, Sir, if we had, we should have sav'd that lady much trouble; 'tis pretty clear now, why she was a vixen.

VIN. Yes, yes, 'tis clear enough, and I beg your pardon, madam, for the share of trouble I gave you—but pray have the goodness to tell me sincerely, what do you think of a crash?

OLIV. I love music, Don Vincentio, I admire your skill, and whenever you'll give me a concert, I shall be oblig'd.

VIN. You cou'd not have pleas'd me so well, if you had married me.

Enter CARLOS and VICTORIA.

OLIV. Hah, here comes Victoria and her Carlos.

My friend, you are happy—'tis in your eyes, I need not ask the event.

CÆs. What is this Don Carlos, whom Victoria gave us for a cousin ? Sir, you come in happy hour !

CAR. I do indeed, for I am most happy.

JULIO. My dear Carlos, what has new made thee thus, since morning ?

CAR. A wife ! Marry, Julio, marry !

JULIO. What ! this advice from you ?

CAR. Yes ; and when you have married an angel, when that angel has done for you such things, as makes your gratitude almost equal to your love, you may then guess something of what I feel, in calling this angel mine.

OLIV. Now, I trust, Don Julio, after all this, that if I should do you the honour of my hand, you'll treat me cruelly, be a very bad man, that I, like my exemplary cousin——

VICT. Hold, Olivia ! it is not necessary that a husband should be faulty, to make a wife's character exemplary.—Should he be tenderly watchful of your happiness, your gratitude will give a thousand graces to your conduct ; whilst the purity of your manners, and the nice honour of your life, will gain you the approbation of those, whose praise is fame.

OLIV. Pretty and matronly ! thank you, my dear. We have each struck a bold stroke to-day ;—your's has been to reclaim a husband, mine to get one ; but the most important is yet to be obtain'd. —The approbation of our judges.

That meed with-held our labours have been vain ;
Pointless my jests, and doubly keen your pain ;
Might we their plaudits, and their praise provoke,
Our bold should then be term'd, a happy stroke.

T H E E N D.

E P I L O G U E.

BY A GENTLEMAN.

YOUR servant, friends, from Spain, you see, I'm come,
A peace abroad,—but is it peace at home?

The sword is sheath'd, our heroes all are quiet,

A gentle woman I, and hate a riot.

To pick a lover from a croud of beaux,

A lady-stroke, though bold, you'll scarce oppose.

To night you've had a trial of our skill

In curing lethargy, that growing ill;

That lifeless inattention and neglect,

Which some deserve, some fear, and some expect;

Say, do you like our scheme? methinks I hear

A reverend sire, beyond his sixtieth year,

In grumbling accents, saying, "Stuff, sad stuff!"

"Now there's a peace, you may have men enough:—

"They want a leg, perhaps, what's that to you?

"They're Frenchmen only, who make use of two.

"Then stay your whining, let your bold strokes cease,

"Each wound in war, is a bold stroke for peace."

How weak your wit, ye lords of the creation,

When set to find a woman's inclination;

Her heart, though ice, the virgin fair and young,

Without an ear, with double share of tongue;

Let the fond youth she likes, but once appear,

His dulcet voice with rapture she can hear;

If

If she cou'd frown, by smiles her pride's disarm'd ;
 She has a heart, when love that heart has warm'd ;
 No tones discordant now, not even nay,
 While sighs to sighs responsive seem to say,
 In accents sweet,—"love, honour and obey." }

Dear liberty, farewell ! from babe to wife,
 I've led a pretty, happy, checquer'd life ;
 I'll tell you how, the tale's not very long,
 But, if you please, I'll give it you in song.

A I R.

When I was a little baby,
 Plump and round as may be,
     For a lullaby
     I'd fret and cry,
 When I was a little baby.

But at six years old, how froward,
 Naughty girl, untoward,
     To dress my doll,
     And prate like poll,
 A naughty girl untoward.

At twelve, what a blooming flower !
 Around me every hour
     Butterflies gay,
     To sip and play,
 Flew round this blooming flower.

At sweet sixteen, so pretty,
 All I said was witty ;
     A charming lass,
     So said my glass,
 At dear sixteen so pretty.

Love's

Love's dart no more to parry,
At twenty-two to marry,
    To one dear youth
    I plight my truth,
And that's the youth I'll marry.

With him I'll toy and play so,
He'll wonder why I stay so ;
    But your applause
    Must crown my cause,
So clap your hands and say so.

F I N I S.

Of the PUBLISHER may be bad,

By the same AUTHOR,

The BELLE's STRATAGEM, a Comedy.

The RUNAWAY, a Comedy.

WHICH IS THE MAN ? a Comedy.

ALBINA, a Tragedy.

WHO's THE DUPE ? a Farce.

THE MAID OF ARRAGON, a Poem.

In the Press, and speedily will be published,

MRS. COWLEY's last New COMEDY, call'd,

MORE WAYS THAN ONE.

